An Associated Press report DARE COUNTY TIMES dated from Gainesville, Georgia, is being hooted in Northeastern North Carolina this week. It is a repetition of an old story that the Lost Colony, including Eleanor Dare went from Roanoke Island to Georgia, and a number of stones with inscriptions purporting to tell the story are coming forth under the auspices of President H. J. Pearce of Brenau College, and his Junior son of Emory University. A total of 24 stones are said to have been found, carved with information about the Lost Colony. Victor Meekins, who said he saw the first Georgia stone at the Georgia exhibit in the New York World Fair, thinks the stone a crude hoax by which the amiable professor was taken in. Other local people express mystification at a college professor being so gullible.

"Had the colony ever gone to Georgia, or South Carolina," they argue, "it doesn't seem reasonable they would have lugged along engravers and stones. Neither would they have assumed that other Englishmen would have chanced upon them in forests so remote And anyway, why go so far, and
