Rush Hamrick, Jr., editor of the Cleveland Times of Shelby, believes in the power of the written word.

He went to the hospital recently for surgery and made a very definite impression on nurses and doctors.

When the medical crew pulled down the sheets, staring up at them was a message written in red ink across Hamrick's stomach.

The message said: "Open with care."

Quips 'n' Quotes

"Middle age is when a broad mind and a narrow waist change places."

"People who have an hour or so to spare usually look up someone who hasn't."

Last Saturday night the Miss America Pageant was held as most every one knows. "Twas a lovely sight with those 60 beautiful misses displaying their talent, charm, and personality. Only one thing marred the event. During the afternoon of that same day as I was listening to the news on the radio, I heard that a civil rights leader had said, "If there isn't a black face in the Pageant next year, there won't be any Pageant." I have never written a word about the race situation because every one hears too much about it anyway, but now I feel it is time for the white people of this country to take a stand before we have to demonstrate to get back the rights we have lost.

Poet's Corner

Cullasaja Gorge

Like the fragile strand of some spider's web,

It spans the face of the canyon's rim,

Or a tightrope etched on the granite cliff,

With men like ants crawling [this highway-grim;

Despite neglect of the powers that be

Who little care for loss of life and limb,

This scenic wonder of the mountain world

Draws multitudes to ride the chasm's brim.

Perched skyward—far—far—above the torrent,

With its distant murmur far below,

One pauses in wonder and amazement

At the timeless years of long ago,

When Deity suffered this tiny stream

Thus to part a mountain peak in twain,

Thus to prove that seeming weakness in God's hand

May move a mount of doubt and fear and pain.

Unguarded—uncared for these many years,

A highway where thousands hold their breath,

No place to park and view this gorge of fears

Save rocky knob atop some brink of death;

And yet perchance in days not far away,

The rugged beauty of this forest land,

May touch the souls of those who have a care,

And make it safe and free for fellow man.

R. L. Conlon.

WHAT THE HIGHLANDER MEANS TO ME

"I have enjoyed The Highlander for several years, and especially since my assignment to Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, two years ago. Here where any newspaper under a week old is a treat, I anxiously wait for each copy.

"I note the previous week's temperatures, and try to imagine a fresh, cool, 75 degree day. Here it is arid, and 90 degrees or above all year.

"Then I read the front page, editorials, and general news. I love 'Looking Backward', and would like to know Mrs. Norris. She writes many words and expressions reminiscent of my boyhood days in Alabama fifty years ago.

"I love the down-to-earth style of The Highlander, the boost it always gives to worthwhile projects, and apparent leadership it provides in seeking to improve the community.

"I am pleased by items of good news for some, saddened by misfortune of others, amused by humorous little incidents, and anxious for our own cabin when reading of forest fires, storms, etc.

"Not being well acquainted in Highlands, I form mental pictures of some who seem always to shoulder the load in local endeavors, drives, etc.

"Two-hundred words could not express all The Highlander means to me."

Sincerely,
E. O. ELDER
