TUESDAY, APRIL 17, 1923.

Lingering in the lap of Spring thisaway old Winter certainly has got himself talked about.

"Am I registered?" is a question for every voter to be sure he or she can answer in the affirmative by May 5th. The women especially, being comparatively new voters, are warned not to take it for granted that because they have registered once they are registered for this election. Different sets of books are kept for city, County, State and National elections.

The idea that Federal money distributed to counties for aid in road building or in other matters is a gift is, as former Senator Townsend says, quite too prevalent. And the same thing is true, to a lesser degree of course, of funds from the State to the counties. All such moneys come out of the taxpayer's own pocket and he will do well to bear this fact in mind.

"The greatest enemy of good roads is the motor truck," is a timely phrase that The Advance culls out of all the good roads oratory at Greenville, South Carolina, today and sets out as worthy of special emphasis. The suggestion that motor-truck licenses should be materially increased might also be well taken. Experience in this County indicates that there are trucks in use in the section which ought to be debarred from the paved roads altogether.

PAT MOORE, YOUNGESTER, IN FOX PHOTODRAMA

Pat Moore, the delightful youngster, who appears as the youngest son of "The Village Blacksmith" in the William Fox photo drama of that name, based on Henry W. Longfellow's masterful poem, is the son of an illustrious father and mother. Tom Moore, the lad's father, was at one time a champion swimmer and holds two world's records. His mother was Nora Moore, a celebrated English actress. Besides being an accomplished actress, Mrs. Moore wrote several productions and appeared in the title roles in the Gaiety Theatre in London. Pat was born in England and when his father and mother moved to California the little fellow naturally drifted into motion pictures and became an instantaneous success.
