THE ADVANCE

These are questions that are perplexing the special committee appointed at the last session of the City Council to look into the matter of possible sites for a municipal building for Elizabeth City. Members of the committee want to hear from their constituents both in way of suggestions as to sites that are available and in way of views as to what is the best possible site. Members of the committee are Councilmen Gordon, Ferebee and Hughes, and The Advance hopes that its readers may show the proper interest now before decision is made as to this important matter. Little or no good will be done by criticism of action taken after decision has been reached and a site purchased.

ABOUT OUR STREETS

Your editorial, "A Bit of Repetition." was something I had wished to hear "talked out in school." For years I have raised my poor weak voice along that line. But you are wrong about there being two Persses are two or three Williams Reed to streets and one William. And of course it makes confusion — in fire streets and one William. And of course it makes confusion — in fire surrance policies very particularly. Over twenty-five years ago, I advocated opening Harney street to Culpepper, making a straight street from Ehringhaus to Bell street. which would have made a very much needed crosstown thoroughfare. It was published in The Fisherman and Farmer (that and other suggestions as to this important matter. Little or no good will be done by criticism of action taken after decision has been reached and a site purchased.

over the world last week, had inscribed on his tombstone "Benjamin Franklin, printer."

Franklin was indeed a printer, and one of the best workmen the craft has ever produced, as well as a statesman and a philosopher. But Benjamin Franklin was also an editor, and every editor who has been faithful and true to himself and to those whom he serves feels a spirit of comradeship with this great American when he reads the following story:

Soon after the establishment Soon after the establishment of his paper, a person brought Franklin a piece, which he requested him to publish in the Pennsylvania Gazette. Franklin desired that the piece might be left for his consideration until next day, when he would give an answer. The person returned at the time appointed, and received from Franklin this communication: "I have perused your piece, and find it to be scurriflous and defauatory." To determine whether I should

From this regimen I feel no inconvenience whatever. Finding I can live in this manner, I have formed a determination never to prostitute my press to the purpose of corruption, & abuse of this kind, for the sake of gaining a more comfortable subsistence."

The letters NEA, seen in credit lines at the head of feature stories in The Advance. stand for Newspaper Enterprise Association, which is the name of the service which supplies The Advance with comics, illustrated news, and illustrated features. The Association is well named, for The Advance has found it the most enterprising organization of its sort in this country.
