Same Suzanne

Mlle. Suzanne Lenglen, international tennis champion, gets into action at Cannes. It was her first appearance this year, and she's showing better form than ever, according to observers.

Caution the Big Word

On its farm page today The Advance carries an interview with J. H. LeRoy in which Mr. LeRoy advises farmers to plant all the cotton they can take care of next season.

Indications are that, regardless of the advice given them, Albemarle farmers are getting ready to do that very thing.

And yet The Advance is not convinced that Mr. LeRoy's advice is sound or that the farmers are right.

It is the unflinching experience of cotton growing regions that the first years of heavy weevil infestation are years of severe losses and of acute distress for cotton farmers.

The weevil made its first appearance in Pasquotank in 1922. The damage that year was inappreciable; but Pasquotank farmers were warned by County Agent Falls that a 10 per cent damage might be looked for this year. That prediction of Mr. Falls was fully justified. Some sections of the County suffered more and some less, but the average was certainly as high, in our opinion, as 10 per cent.

With a fairly moderate winter this year and considerable moist weather, there would appear to be every reason to believe that boll weevil damage next year, judged by what it has amounted to in the second year of real infestation in other sections, would amount to from 25 to 50 per cent in Pasquotank County.

It is, so far as The Advance can learn, practically the unvarying experience of other sections that the cotton growers have to suffer one year of almost total loss of their crop before they can be taught to grow cotton successfully under weevil conditions.

Pasquotank may be, and The Advance hopes, will be, spared that experience. Pasquotank farmers are fortunate in that they have at their hands all the information that the Government has gained in the fight against the weevil in other sections of the cotton belt. But at the same time The Advance believes the Pasquotank farmer and other cotton growers of the Albemarle would do well not to figure too confidently on being able to make two bales or even one bale of cotton to the acre this year. Our judgment is that until the usual period required for boll weevil infestation to reach its height—say, two or three years—has passed the safest attitude for the farmer to take toward cotton would be one of extreme caution.

Before coming to Elizabeth City, the editor of this newspaper had lived practically all his life where cotton was the principal money crop. Frankly, even could this section be spared all further depredation from the boll weevil, he would hate to see it become the principal money crop of the farmers of Pasquotank.

The Fall of Fall

We see right now where we have let ourselves in for it. On the heels of publication in yesterday's issue of the paragraphs by an Elizabeth City Quillen, we find a deluge of brilliants in this morning's mail. We could never read them all, but here is a sample:

"Fall has fallen, not because Fall wanted to fall, but because there was nothing else for Fall to do but fall, but instead of waiting to fall after next fall, Fall fell between Falls, which makes it bad for both Fall and Fall's party; and unless Fall and Fall's party can fall upon some scheme to make a complete SPRING-back, Fall's rival party may AUTUMN-atically fall next Fall into the place from which Fall and Fall's party fell."

We gather that Edwin Denby, whatever sort of Secretary of the Navy you may call him, is a first rate fighting man.

Now it seems to be the case of an oil's well that ends Fall:

ELIZABETH CITY SEVEN YEARS AGO

January 30, 1917. Dr. Clarence Poe, editor of the Progressive Farmer, was to address a meeting at the Alkrama Theater, to mark the climax of the Community Service month.

A negro restaurant, barber shop, and lodging house, the property of Dr. H. T. Aydtlett, on Poindexter street, was gutted by flames. It would have been entirely destroyed had it not been for the quick work of the fire department who soon had three streams of water playing on it.

Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Seeley were overjoyed to receive a letter from their son, Jarvis Seeley, who shipped from Newport News the previous year in the Norwegian barque Siam for Brazil. In Bahia, he said, he had a great time spending $50 in Uncle Sam's money then at a great premium in South America. He planned to return to the states after he had seen Australia.

Secretary Pugh of the Chamber of Commerce was in Raleigh in the interest of a bill to permit the building of a road from Gates County to Elizabeth City.

W. L. Cohoon and Thomas J. Markham were in Raleigh for the purpose of fighting Representative Scott's bill to permit the people of Pasquotank County to vote on whether to retain the chain gang system.

Senator Johnson of Currituck had prepared a bill to prevent the hunting of ducks, geese, or swan by means of an airplane or other flying device.

About the best things raised on a farm are children. Maybe churches are usually on corners so people will have a chance to turn to the right.

Mud baths are being used to make women beautiful, so we may see some pretty politicians after mud sifting elections. The broomstick is mightier than the lipstick. There is a great deal of horsepower in horse sense. One time we saw a stump speaker who was up a tree.
