Could Not Love Mother
Believing In No Fairies

Twelve-Year-Old Kathleen Malloy Chooses Foster Instead of Real Mother and Court Grants Child's Plea That She be Not Robbed of Joy of Make Believe

By MARGARET DALE.
(Copyright, 1924, By The Advance)

Chicago, March 20.—Twelve-year-old Kathleen Malloy probably has never even heard of Sir James M. Barrie, but she and the famous author and playwright agree on one cardinal point. It is that if you don't believe in fairies, you don't "belong."

begged him to let her stay with Mrs. Wrightman. The court compromised by telling Kathleen to go stay with her mother for six weeks and see how she liked it.
When the six weeks were up, Kathleen wanted to live with Mrs. Wrightman. The court placed her in a "neutral" home for four more months, authorizing Mrs. Malloy to visit the child whenever she wished, in an effort to win her back.

Abe Martin
An optimist is a fellow that believes the worst'll hit sidetracked. The few finer experiences than runnin' int' a mistake in our favor.

Again we desire to express our appreciation of the good work being done now by the country correspondents of The Advance.

We ain't what you might called favorably impressed with having the present House of Representatives name the next President.

When thieves fall out just men get their dues, according to the ancient maxim. But what is to be the sequel of a Republican's being thrown out of a second story window remains to be seen.

The Advance would like to get some expert opinion on the question of how much the recent storm was worth to North Carolina in the way of cutting down the expense of opening New Inlet.

On the Run

Criminal terms of Superior Court always keep this scribe on the run, the matter of making a try at keeping up with what is going on in the courthouse, as well as on his regular beat, making considerable leg work and head work necessary, especially as a considerable part of the editor's day has to be taken up with details of business management.

But we'll be frank to say that cases have been disposed of in Judge Devin's court this week at such a rate as to work the editor just a little harder than he ever remembers to have worked in any previous session.

Well, here's hoping that we can catch up next week. The truth is, though, that the editor's job since the Advance became an eight page newspaper keeps about a half a day ahead of him pretty nearly all the time, despite his best efforts through a 15 to 18 hour day.

Here's hoping that "School News" may develop a good cub reporter for us by the time we are able to pay one a beginner's modest salary.
