It takes a mighty vital issue to get out the full vote, but we'll bet a light beer or wine plank would get out the half full vote.

Old Reliable Generous

The News and Observer of Friday not only carried a complete report of the Coastal Highway meeting at Hertford but also commented editorially on the meeting thus:

The great meeting at Hertford Thursday was one of the many signs of the new life dominating the eastern section of the State.

The naming of Charles Whedbee as chairman of the committee of arrangements was guaranteed that the occasion would be marked with thoroughness and efficiency.

The central portion of the State is deeply interested in good roads in the northeastern section and particularly in more bridges across the rivers of that section which for lack of these bridges has been cut off from the rest of the State.

Celebrating its fifteenth birthday, the Hertford County Herald, published at Ahoskie, issues a 24-page edition on book paper that is a credit to its management, its home town and its county.

While we are jubilant over the fact that Route 30 has been included along with Route 40 as a part of the Coastal Highway, it is just as well to bear in mind that you can't pave a road by merely putting it on the map.

There are exceptions to all rules, but as a general rule this bootleg liquor marks its victim when he ought to be just in his prime with the unmistakable signs of old age.

We're hoping that the visit of Rev. J. L. Cunningham to Elizabeth City has been merely deferred—not cancelled.

Everyman's Investments

By George T. Hughes

Safer Oil Securities

In the refining, transporting and marketing divisions of the oil industry there is sometimes sound basis for issues of bonds, preferred stocks or notes.

But every such oil enterprise is different from every other and investment bankers must consider them on their merits. Here is a modest, efficient and profitable refining company with a pipe line system to the wells of producers from whom it buys.

On the other side the small refining company might meet marketing difficulties and be compelled to add cars, tank steamers and other equipment to get its product to the consumer.

Mr. Hughes is a bond expert and analyst with many years' active newspaper experience. Every week day of the year he writes an interpretive dispatch from New York concerning the activities of the day in the bond market.

Larger companies vary in their financial structure. A number have developed on common stock issues, putting back a substantial part of their earnings into their properties and extensions.

Tank cars and steamers are sometimes pledged under equipment trusts as security for bonds and such securities of high class companies are considered excellent.

The securities of established, capably-managed, sound oil companies may be very desirable, but, unfortunately, the public does not usually buy the securities of such enterprises. It requires consummate ability to operate an oil business successfully, for the risks and uncertainties of the production end naturally are reflected in a measure to every other division of the industry.

(Mr. Hughes' thirteenth article will appear in The Advance next Monday.)

Bright Lights Of Chicago The Undoing Of Constance

Main Street-Venus from Gopher Prairie Found Her Adonis in Art Institute of Big City but Discovery Ended in No Happiness for Her

By OWEN L. SCOTT

Chicago, May 3.—Eighteen year old Constance McDermott, the "nude Venus" of the Chicago Art Institute, was struggling back to life in a Chicago hospital today after an unsuccessful attempt to end it all by poison as she stepped, undraped, from her class room pedestal.

The Chicago Art Institute—fully equipped with live models—is growing by leaps and bounds. Its enrollment, mostly of young people, has passed the 4,000 mark.

Constance McDermott's attempt at suicide marked the high spot in the romance of a "Main Street" girl.

classes of young men and women, many barely out of high school, who were concentrating on "life studies."

Constance took her place before her class and stood patiently for a half hour while the busy students reduced her sinuous curves to paper.

sicians said she had a chance to recover. When she gets out of the hospital, Constance may go back to posing.
