It's all right t' be a Republican part o' th' time, or a Democrat some o' th' time, but we all ought t' vote fer th' best man any ole time. It's too bad folks can't be good without it makin' ther faces sour on' colorless.

Count the Votes

Well, folks, it's all over but the shouting and The Advance and, we suspect, Advance readers, breathe a sigh of vast relief.

The votes will tell the story, and The Advance is entirely willing to let them do the talking. So far as this primary is concerned, we have had our say.

A primary campaign is hard to live through at best. This has been far from the least unendurable one we ever experienced. The Advance has striven to the best of its ability to preserve the amenities of ordinary courtesy throughout the period of strained personal relations that accompany hard fought political contests and to give every candidate, as far as in it lay, a square deal. Where language has been left somewhat to our discretion, as in the news columns, we have endeavored to tone down rather than to magnify the exchanges of recrimination between parties in a dispute and have striven where our advice was asked, to counsel against harsh epithets even in the matter of paid advertisements. Where we have espoused the cause of a candidate we have done it openly, and where, as between contestants, we did not feel that the issues involved were sufficiently grave to call for a stand for one or another on the part of this newspaper, we have tried not to let our personal preferences crop out in our news columns, certainly not to the extent of doing any candidate an injustice. On the other hand, we have not hesitated to declare our whole mind where the trend of events has seemed to call upon us to take a stand.

And now that all is over, practically, except counting the votes, we will say that we don't believe a single candidate stands a ghost of a show in the primary the election of whom would amount to a calamity from a standpoint of the general welfare, whatever elements of personal disappointment or tragedy anybody's defeat might involve. Having met the issues of the primary according to the dictates of its own conscience, and having spoken its mind sincerely and without malice, and as wisely and as kindly as it knew how, The Advance awaits the outcome with equanimity. Things sometimes really happen as it seems they should. And when they don't, eventually all things are found to have worked together for the common good.

Silent Cal Really Happy Tinkering With His Radio

Here's Companion That One Can Just Listen to Without Having to Uncork Even an Occasional Uh-huh to Encourage It and Key It Going

By EDNA MARSHALL

Washington, June 7.—"Silent Cal" Coolidge has found a friend whom he does not have to give even an occasional nod or "uh-huh" to indicate that he is following. It's his radio.

Every evening, when he has put aside the cares and duties of his exalted office, the President sinks into a cushioned easy chair, dreamily closes his eyes, and just listens while other people talk about the problems he has had to face that day, or refreshes his mind with poetry, music and jests.

Just to listen; not even to be obliged to laugh unless the remark actually warrants it—that is the Presidential idea of solid and perfect comfort. What his jimmy pipe is to the proverbial backwoodsman, what a bit of fishing tackle is to a tired business man on vacation, that and more his radio set is to the occupant of the White House.

Sometimes, when the day has not been too hard, and he is in an experimental mood, the President draws his chair close to the magic cabinet and tinkers with its various connections, trying to see what distant one. Perhaps it is the most powerful one in the country, having been specially designed for the White House at the Washington navy yards. He could easily pick up London and other foreign stations. But he insists on hearing America first.

Already the President's enthusiasm has made of Mrs. Coolidge an ardent fan and almost any evening the two might be found at their set in the President's study, exalted but invisible units in the nightly audience of millions of radio fans. Frequently no effort is made to pick up stations outside of Washington, the listeners being content with the programs offered by local stations. Then again, they will go out after the long distance points.

Meanwhile, John and Calvin, Jr., have become busy amateurs at school and when they come back to the White House for the summer and get at "Dad's" fine big set, they set out to outstrip the President in reaching far-away stations. The President apparently is looking forward to competition at home, when the boys get on the job, for he has asked the Navy Department to get him a second set to be placed on the South portico of the White House. He also has had a set installed on board the Presidential Mayflower for week-end amusement.

The radio probably will become more than a plaything next week when the Republican National Convention gets under way at Cleveland to nominate Mr. Coolidge to succeed himself. The President will follow precedent and stay away from the convention city, but his set will keep him in constant touch with the proceedings out in the Middle West.
