

Many Homes Made Happy By Revival's Extension

Results of Tuesday and Wednesday Services Alone Make Prolonging of Revival in Elizabeth City An- other Week Worth While Say Service Attendants

Elizabeth City is yet to be shaken and moved to depths that have not yet been reached by the Ham-Ramsay evangelistic campaign if the spirit manifested at the services of Tuesday and Wednesday night continues to grow and spread.

The sudden cold snap of the first of the week has cut down attendance somewhat, and the tabernacle was not filled at either Tuesday or Wednesday nights service. However, both these services were intensely spiritual and the response to the evangelist's invitation seemed more spontaneous and heartfelt than at any time since the opening of the campaign.

Despite the relatively small crowd, the inquiry room Wednesday night was filled. Among those who came forward at the evangelist's invitation at Wednesday night's service was Dr. Z. Fearing, and there was an affecting scene when the evangelist led him to the platform and asked those in the congregation who rejoiced in the step Dr. Z. Fearing had taken to manifest it by upraised hands. There was an overwhelming response, following which a few throngs crowded into the aisles to shake the evangelist's hand and to make their way back into the inquiry room. Some of these were accompanied by friends who were almost shouting with joy.

Tonight the evangelist will preach his sermon to young converts on the "Overcoming Life," and all who have been converted or reclaimed during the meeting are especially urged to attend this service and to get this message, which, for them Mr. Ham regards as one of the most important that he delivers.

God is Love
Wednesday night's sermon follows:
We are going to take for our text one of the shortest sentences that means more to mankind than any statement that could be made. This sentence contains only three words and nine letters. Listen, "God is Love."

Several years ago, Mr. Spurgeon was driving out through his parish and passed the home of one of his parishioners. He noticed that on the weather vane which topped the chimney of the house, was inscribed this sentence: "God is Love." Seeing the owner he inquired, "My friend, do you mean by that motto that God's love is as changeable as the wind?"

"No, Mr. Spurgeon," replied his friend, "I mean that God's love is the same whichever way the wind blows."
Now we see God's love manifested in many ways and in some of them we are ready to admit without question the fact of this manifestation, but in others we are either blind or thoughtless and are inclined to question God's love being manifested in such a way. Now we are going to note some of the means which God has for demonstrating His love for us and which we, in our blindness, are questioning.

We all admit that God is Power; we all admit that God is All-Wise; we all agree that God is never surprised; no one will question that God knows the end of all things from the beginning. He even holds the keys of the future in His hands and knows all that is yet to be, but, brother, did you ever stop to think that, aside from being all powerful and all wise and all sufficient and that aside from being a God of wrath and of terrible judgment, God is also—LOVE?

God's Love Revealed
We have seen His power and His wisdom revealed in creation. Now we are going to note how God reveals His Love.

First, God's love is revealed through His impartiality. Look all around you at the men whom you know to be God's enemies; men who are wicked and blasphemous and vile of life and thought, yet God, in His marvelous impartiality, sends the rain upon the just and the unjust alike. Health, prosperity, temporal blessings of all kinds He freely gives as an expression of His great love for even those who are in open rebellion against Him and who are heedless of His commandments and have no regard for His desires. They enjoy His sunshine, breathe His atmosphere and bask in many of His earthly favors. But if God was like you or me, this could not be said. We would hate, not love, our enemies and would do all in our power to humiliate them and cause them to suffer. I have often rejoiced that I did not have God's great power for I would certainly have taken these enemies of His and at least held them over the pits of Hell and singed them into submission. But not so with God. He doesn't want service that has to be coerced. Man is his own free moral agent, created in the image and likeness of God and God has decreed that he must choose whom he will serve. No, God is no respecter of persons and His love is revealed through His impartiality.

Again God's love is revealed in His silence. There is probably nothing which has caused such widespread wonder as the fact that an all powerful God would sit in silence and permit the arrogant wicked to prosper in their iniquity and would even allow His own followers to suffer the hardships and persecutions to which they have been subjected. Think of it! In the early days of Christianity, prophet after prophet who had thundered out against the wickedness of a corrupt generation and had proclaimed faithfully the unspeakable riches of Christ were stoned and crucified and burned or suffered all manner of persecution and yet an all powerful God sat silently and witnessed it all without a protest. Wars have come with their bloodshed, their cruelty, their devastation and have left behind them helpless widows and crying orphans, yet never a protest from God, when those whose love for God home, loved ones, family, country and gave all that they might see to heaven lands and preach Christ only to be ruthlessly murdered and tortured by those whom they would have helped. And God sat silent. Can it be possible that God's love is revealed in His tolerance of such atrocities?

Yes, my brother, even here we see manifested the great love of God. This brings me back to the statement I have made many times in your midst: God has removed all law from the earth except the law of love or grace. He is giving man his chance; He is letting man choose for himself. God has tested man under every dispensation of history until now, and in each of them man has miserably failed, despite the fact that God cared for him, spoke to him and gave him signs of His power and finally man went so far as to even crucify God's Son whom He had sent to earth to minister. Now God has withdrawn from the earth—He has pronounced sentence on the earth for crucifying His Son, but, in His great love, He has declared an amnesty and has suspended judgment in order that He might give man one more chance. He has called on man to surrender on the terms of the Cross and He has left the Cross with its blinding message of His love and its open show of man's hatred of God to be His final message to this world. God has spoken for the last time and He cannot speak again without speaking in judgment which would mean the eternal damnation of the Cross. God is exactly in the position of a father who, in proving his child, tells him that he has spoken for the last time. When He speaks again it must be in judgment or He could not be God. Yes, brother, nothing has revealed God's great love more than His silence and long suffering to us.

Again we see God's love revealed in the limitations which He has placed around His children. God has placed us under limitations because He wanted to withhold us from evil and to withhold evil from us. Men do not readily concede that love is manifest in limitations and prohibitions, but any one who will look deeper into the philosophy of life will be able to comprehend it. God's law as set forth in the Decalogue is a string of prohibitions, each beginning with "Thou shalt not" and we are prone to fret under these restrictions. But they are all intended for our good. The infinite mind of God sees further than the poor, finite mind of man and He sees that every violation of these laws can but result in injury to ourselves. Every tear shed, every pang of pain felt, every sigh or regret ever uttered can be traced directly to some violation of these restrictions. God needs to restrain you from this sort of self injury by His limitations, just as the loving mother places a chair across the open door to restrain the toddling babe from falling out and injuring himself. On my father's farm was a dangerous sinkhole which was a veritable trap for livestock. So one day my father sent the hands down to put a ten rail fence around it. The first two rails were a commandment to the pigs saying "Thou shalt not fall into the sinkhole." The third and fourth rails said to the shoats "Thou shalt not fall into the sinkhole." The higher rails up to the top said to the cows and horses "Thou shalt not fall into the sinkhole."

She Broke The Law
But we had an old long nosed sow which was a notorious fence breaker. She had one of these noses that could lick cream out of the bottom of a churn, and one day she got her nose between two rails and kept pushing and worked until she broke a rail and fell into the hole. A week later when

J. D. FARRIOR TO APPLY FOR PARDON

Pending his appeal from the sentence of a prison term imposed by Superior Court N. A. Sinclair here last week, J. D. Farrior will on the 22nd day of December make application to Governor Morrison for pardon. It became known here today.

Farrior was sentenced on Wednesday afternoon of last week to a term of from one to three years in State prison for assault upon Joe Swindel with intent to kill, after a plea of guilty on Farrior's part. Swindel was convicted of misconduct toward the 13 year old granddaughter of the Wilson man.

BANK PRESIDENT COMMITTS SUICIDE

Greenwood, S. C., Nov. 20.—B. F. McKellar, president of the People's Bank here, recently closed, committed suicide here yesterday after being found guilty of violations of the State banking laws. He was to have been sentenced today.

We found her and windlassed her out she was like Job's turkey which was "so poor it had to lean up against the fence to gobble." The sow had to lean up against the fence to grunt. As I stood there looking at her I said, "You old fool, why did you break that commandment?" And I never see a man behind the bars, I never see a man in the gutter or a woman lost in shame that I don't think of that old fool sow.

Limitations are necessary in every sphere of life to insure happiness and safety. My freedom must be limited when yours begins.

There is one blessed thing about this gospel. I can go to the most wicked of you and say to you that God loves you, regardless of how far you have wandered from Him and that He is anxiously waiting to take you under His watchful care. Some people have been so foolish as to insist that children should be allowed to sow their wild oats in order that they might learn life's lesson by experience. Listen, brother, do you mean to tell me that the best teachers are the harlots and drunkards and criminals that infest our land? No, no, I prefer the conservation of a spotless life to the rescue of a debauched and dishonored life.

Love and Punishment
Then again, God's love is revealed in His punishments. We are told that "Whom He loveth He chasteneth." Many have considered this inconsistent and are inclined to regard God's chastisement as evidence of His anger and wrath. Brother, God does not punish in order to vent His wrath, but to prove His love. My father never punished me when he was angry and any father who vents his anger on his child is making a serious mistake, and is losing his grip and influence on his child. God does not punish, but in order to lead us from future sins. I don't know of a punishment which God has visited upon me which I would have removed for I can now see that it brought a blessing. God hates to punish us. I hate to punish my little girls and often when I am going home I write to my wife to talk to the girls and ask them to be good so that I won't have to punish them during my short stay with them and then have to leave them and suffer for six months because of my harsh treatment of them during my short visit. I used to think it strange when my father would call me down to the barn and cry over me and tell me how much he loved me and how he hated to punish me and then have him demonstrate his love with two or three good long hickory switches. I used to tell him that I wished he didn't "love me so hard." I will never forget one whipping which I believe is responsible for me being here tonight. One day I slipped away with some of my friends to the swimming hole for a swim. It so happened that we had some good neighbors who always helped my father rear us and when I returned home I knew immediately that something was wrong. The next morning my father called me aside and told me how I had brought shame upon him as a minister and had disgraced him in the eyes of the community and disgraced myself by my conduct and after having kept me in terrible suspense for an hour or more, he proceeded to "talk some more and talked for three good long ones." He talked so loud that I still heard him a week later for when on the following Sunday I heard the familiar whistle of my playmates and their invitation to go swimming I quickly replied, "Nothing doing, fellows." On that very Lord's Day three were drowned and I might have been one of the three. Well, I said to myself, that was one time a good licking was worth something. At least it was better than being drowned. I can see now that it was the punishment of love.

H. T. Opsahl, science instructor in the Barnwell (Miss.) High School had his own ideas about maintaining "classroom discipline." He got a common office chair and equipped it with Tesla coil. But one pupil, Earl Terenson, claims one let was electrically burned. As a result, Opsahl was arrested on an assault charge. SEES ONLY HOPE IN REAL REVIVAL

A three minute talk by George J. Benson, travelling agent of Richmond, was a notable feature of Thursday morning's service at the Ham-Ramsay tabernacle.

Mr. Benson drew a vivid contrast between the home life of the present day and that of a generation ago and gave it as his opinion that a revival of old time religion, with the re-establishment of the family altar in the home, was the one thing that would save the young girls of the day from straying into paths of sin.

"The mothers of today are as careless as their daughters," said he, and expressed thankfulness that the wife of the little girls in his home, though younger than he was an old fashioned mother.

The subject selected for the State-Trinity debate is "Resolved, that the proposed amendment to the federal constitution providing for the regulation of child labor be adopted."

Raleigh, Nov. 20.—Needs of the cities and towns of North Carolina in the way of new laws and changes in old statutes, will be discussed at a meeting here on November 25 of the North Carolina Municipal Association. The meeting will be held in the courtroom of the Municipal building here.

The North Carolina Municipal Association is composed of officers of cities throughout the state. Its object is to work out things for the betterment of cities and towns and to look after the interests of the minor political subdivisions.

The meeting which was called by Secretary W. L. Boswell of Raleigh, at the direction of president D. M. Clark, mayor of Greenville, will have for its subject the legislative program to be laid before the General Assembly when it meets in January. There are many matters of interest to the cities and towns, according to officials of the organization, that they need attention of the legislature and it is to learn what these are and to plan concerted action for such as seem of importance enough, that the meeting has been called.

Capital Determined To Get Reckless Auto Driver

Accidents on Streets Nation's Capital Reach Proportions of Scandal and Aroused Sentiment Compels Police to Take Drastic Action

By ROBERT T. SMALL
Copyright, 1921, by The Advance

Washington, Nov. 20.—A determined drive to rid city streets and country roads of the reckless automobile driver is to be launched by the various motorists' associations which have their national headquarters in this city. It is recognized by leaders in the automobile industry as well as in the motorists' organizations that a crisis rapidly is being reached in the tolerance of the man in the street toward the driver of a car and unless some check can be placed voluntarily upon traffic evils, drastic retaliatory legislation may result in seriously reduced use of the automobile and a decreased output of motor cars. The motorists' associations are anxious to head off any such retaliation, but they are equally interested in protecting the careful driver from the onslaughts of the reckless and incompetent man at the wheel.

Washington itself is undergoing a red order of motor recklessness. Almost daily there are cases of persons knocked down and seriously injured while the driver of the car speeds away from the scene, caring nothing of the fate of his victim. Three deaths have resulted in this way and the police have been unable to trace the drivers who have been denounced by the coroner as "murderers." Chief of Police Sullivan has told his officers that the man who leaves a victim lying unattended in street or road is guilty of deliberate bloodshed. One type of murderer, he says, has the intent to kill prior to the commission of the crime. The automobile driver or the motorist who does not do the first aid that might result in saving his life; therefore his delinquency comes after the act instead of before.

The Washington people are aroused as never before against the motorist and are urging the police to renewed efforts to check the ever mounting accident list. In past years the authorities have been somewhat lax in the licensing of drivers, with the result that visiting motorists all complain that they find more incompetent and alarming driving on the streets of the national capital than anywhere else in the entire United States. The streets are unusually wide here, but instead of making for safety in traffic seem to aid and abet it. The driver, not compelled to remain in a traffic lane, as on narrow thoroughfares, runs wild all over the place and it is up to the pedestrian to take care of his life and limb as best he may.

It has been illustrated in the case of the colored chauffeur of Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury. Driving one of Mr. Mellon's cars, with the latter's secretary in it, the chauffeur ran amuck on the Connecticut Avenue bridge—one of the most fashionable thoroughfares in the city. He left a trail of damaged cars and curbs and his tones bear a close resemblance to those of the violin and cello.

Commenting on a recent performance given by her in St. Louis, Mo., the Post-Dispatch, of that city, states that "the Hawaiian ukulele, usually regarded as nothing more than a toy, was handled by a master, and the result was truly amazing."

To those who enjoy a musical company whose offerings are clever, artistic, and distinctive, the Golden Gate Concert Company makes an instantaneous appeal.
