

Coolidge Not Committed On Special Session Issue

While President Undoubtedly Inclined Against Convening Congress Before Regular Session Does Not Feel Hands Tied in Matter

By DAVID LAWRENCE
Washington, Nov. 21.—While President Coolidge is disinclined to call an extra session of Congress after next March, he is not definitely and irrevocably committed against such a policy.

The question becomes pertinent now in view of the widespread discussion especially in the press of the administration's policy with reference to tax revision. The impression has come out that the country must wait until the winter of 1926 for its next cut in taxes, nearly a year and a half after the overwhelming Republican victory in which the Mellon tax plan and tax reform itself was an issue.

But the administration did not intend that its announcement of unwillingness to take tax reform until after the receipts from the present law are known in March or April next should be taken in conjunction with the mere or less uncertain question of calling Congress into session.

The Treasury is insistent that the present law should be given a chance to work. Senator Smoot, chairman of the finance committee, says the Treasury will know definitely how productive the new law has been when the income tax returns are filed next March 15. Many newspaper editorials have raised the query as to why the administration then wants to wait till the December 1925 session of Congress which means action in the winter of 1926 before passing a joint resolution giving the tax payers the benefit of any surplus that may be known to be accumulating as soon as the 1924 tax returns are received next March.

Suppose, for example, it should develop on April first next that a surplus of $300,000,000 has been accomplished as a result of the new tax law, will the tax payers want an extra session then and there so that during the year 1925 they shall be permitted to reduce 25 per cent from their taxes just as they did after the joint resolution was passed last spring affecting the preceding year's taxes? Whoever can answer that

What Is The Neurocalometer?

(Trade Mark Reg. U. S. Patent Office)

Seeing Is Believing

The Neurocalometer, a scientific instrument, is so sensitive that when placed over the spine it will immediately register a certain degree of pressure, showing the location of the interference to transmission. The Chiropractor then knows what vertebrae to adjust. After giving the adjustment the Neurocalometer is again applied and wonderful as it may seem, it registers in all cases a considerable reduction, and in some cases even zero. Why? Because the nerve pressure has been relieved and normal transmission has been restored. Could anything be more convincing? No more worrying about whether your Chiropractor has given you the right adjustment or not. Seeing is believing. You are satisfied, and in time will get well.

The Neurocalometer Is The Greatest Step Forward In Chiropractic History

The one great object of the Chiropractor is to get sick people well, in the shortest possible time, at the least possible expense.

The majority of disease is caused by certain vertebrae (small bones of the spine) being out of place, pressing on the nerve and thus preventing the all important vital force from flowing uninterruptedly to the different organs. This interruption of transmission causes disease, as the organs involved are unable to function normally. The logical thing to be done is to relieve the pressure on the nerves so that normal transmission will again prevail. The result is that the effect (disease) disappears, because the cause (nerve pressure) has been adjusted.

This is what the Chiropractor does, i. e., relieves the nerve pressure by means of Chiropractic adjustments given with the bare hands alone. Chiropractic, like other sciences, is progressing daily, and it has now reached the point where the Neurocalometer has been invented, not to treat your disease (Chiropractors never treat) but

- (1) To determine the exact place in the spine where transmission has been interfered with.
- (2) To show the patient this exact place, and to show him what happens when the correct adjustment is given.

It proves beyond a doubt the truth of the philosophy, art and science of Chiropractic, proving to the most skeptical that Chiropractic indeed "Gets Sick People Well."
