From the N. O. Crescent.
Washington's Farewell Address.
Eds. Crescent--In the Bee of Monday, among the proceedings of the State Senate on the 11th of February, I find the following:--Mr. Sigur said, "I am astonished that a gentleman of the intelligence of the Senator from West Baton Rouge (Mr. Clarke) should have fallen into the popular delusion, that the Farewell Address was written by George Washington. It was the joint production of Jefferson and Madison."

At the present time, when a spirit of dis-union is abroad, generated by fanatics North and South, any remark tending to lessen the weight of the advice given by the Father of his Country in his Farewell Address, should receive a marked censure. The honorable Senator from New Orleans authoritatively rebukes a fellow member for his ignorance in believing that the Farewell Address was written by George Washington. Such, says the Senator, is "a popular delusion, the address was the joint production of Jefferson and Madison."

Every American who has read the political history of the close of the administration of Washington knows, or should know, that George Washington was not on political or personal terms with Mr. Jefferson at the celebrated address was issued. The history of the address is given by the late John Jay in a letter to Judge Peters, dated Bedford, State of New York, 29th March, 1811.
This letter commences on page 336 of the 2d volume of "The life and writings of John Jay, by his Son." This letter fully vindicates Washington's title to the authorship, by facts within the knowledge of Jay. If sir, you have the deep interest in the unsullied and spotless character of him who was "First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of the countrymen," may I beg of you to publish Mr. Jay's letter. It may prove of great good to some people in our Legislature.

DEMOCRAT.
Dear Sir-- Bedford, March 29, 1841.
If it be possible to find a man among those whom he esteemed, capable of offering to him such a present, it is impossible to believe that President Washington was the man to whom such a present would have been acceptable. They who knew President Washington, and his various endowments, qualifications, and virtues, know that, aggregately considered, they found a tout ensemble which has rarely been equalled, and perhaps never excelled.

Such much for presumptive evidence. I will now turn your attention to some that it is direct.
The history (if it may be so called) of the address is not unknown to me; but as I came to the knowledge of it under implied confidence, I doubted, when I first received your letter, whether I ought to disclose it. On more mature reflection, I became convinced, that if President Washington was now alive, and informed of the facts in question, he would not only authorize, but desire me to reduce it to writing; that when necessary, it might be used to invalidate the imputations to which those facts give color. This consideration terminated my doubts. I do not think that a disclosure is necessary at this moment, but I fear such a moment will arrive. Whether I shall then be alive, or in capacity to give testimony, is so uncertain, that in order to avoid the risk of either, I shall now reduce it to writing, and commit it to your care and discretion, de bene esse as the lawyer says.

Some time before the address appeared Colonel (afterwards General) Hamilton informed me, that he had received a letter from President Washington, and with it the draught of a farewell address, which the President had prepared, and on which he requested our opinion. He then proposed that we should fix on a day for an interview at my house on the subject. A day was accordingly appointed. On that day Colonel Hamilton attended. He observed to me, in words to this effect--that after having read and examined the draught, it appeared to him to be susceptible of improvement--that he thought the easiest and best way to leave the draught untouched and in its fair state; and to write the whole over with such amendments, alterations and corrections as he thought were advisable; and that he had done so. He then proposed to read and make it the subject of our consideration. This being agreed to, he read it; and we proceeded deliberately to discuss, and to consider it, paragraph by paragraph until the whole met with our mutual approbation: some amendments were made during the interview, but none of much importance. Although this business had not been hastily dispatched yet, aware of the consequence of such a paper, I suggested the giving it a further critical examination; but he declined it, saying that he was pressed for time, and was anxious to return the draught to the President without delay. It afterward occurred to me, that a certain proposition was expressed in terms too general and unqualified, and I intended it in a letter to the President.

As the business took the course above mentioned, a recurrence to the draught was unnecessary, and it was not read. There was this advantage in the course pursued-- the President's draught remained (as delicacy required) fair, and not obscured by in-terlineations etc. By comparing it with the paper sent with it, he would immediately observe the particular emendations and corrections that were proposed; and would find them standing in their intended places.-- Hence he was enabled to review and decide on the whole matter, with much greater clearness and facility than if he had received them in separate and detached notes, and with detailed references to the pages and lines, where they were advised to be introduced. With great esteem and regard, I am, dear sir, your obedient servant.

JOHN JAY.

THE CHARLESTON MERCURY.
We copy the following from the Mercury because we desire our readers to become familiar with the sentiments of those friends of Southern Rights, whose intelligence and firmness, and moderation, are reliable. If we mistake not the position of the Mercury it is for the Union, at all hazards, if it can be maintained in the integrity of the Constitution. This is all that Union men ask; for a union without this qualification, is, in fact, no union at all. The whole of our editorial remarks on the subject will show the same view of the Nashville Convention. If the matter is settled it will be unnecessary--if it is not, it will be inefficient, in our opinion, for reasons which we have already spread at large before the readers of The Commercial: Effects of Mr. Webster's speech.
Our respected cotemporary of the Wilmington Commercial, on the receipt of Mr.
Webster's speech, gave way to the feeling that the danger was now over, and expressed doubts whether under the circumstances, the people of that State should go on to appoint Delegates to the Nashville Convention.
We cannot but regret such an expression.
If Mr. Webster were the North, with the sentiments he has avowed, we should not doubt of a satisfactory adjustment of the controversy. But he is no more than one man, and what proof have we that he will be sustained by his section? It is even yet to be seen whether Massachusetts will not rise against him. That there is an inclination to do it, appears quite plainly in the first echoes of the press. The Lowell Courier, on receiving a telegraphic report of his speech, significantly remarks that his term of service will expire in 1852. The Boston Atlas of Saturday, says: "The speech, as it has reached us, caused considerable sensation in this city, and we must add, not a very satisfactory one." The National Intelligencer, which has mouth enough for anything that it thinks likely to please the Northern Whigs, has given Mr.
Webster no pledge of approval, and except in a vague compliment to his oratory accompanying the speech, has passed it by as a forbidden topic.

As for New York, the speech is warmly approved by the Herald and the Journal of Commerce. It receives a reluctant and wry-faced support from the Courier and Inquirer and the Commercial Advertiser. It is denounced with bitterness by the Evening Post and the Tribune. What will result from out of this, time only can tell. But it would be cruel self-delusion for the Southern people to yield to the belief that the battle is over and their peace secure. On the contrary, all things are in peril till a settlement, having the force of law, shall have passed both Houses of Congress. Have we a right to count on such a consummation? We are not as yet the evidence of its probability.-- The instructions of Northern Legislatures hang over the heads of Senators and Representatives; their own denunciations of slavery, and pledges of eternal war upon it, stare them in the face. Still more, the firm conviction of each political party, that its assent to a fair adjustment with the South, would throw the other into an antagonistic position and give it the decisive advantage of the support of the entire Abolition faction, is a leaden weight about the necks of politicians that allows little hope of their rising to any generous or patriotic view of the question.

Moreover, they eagerly bring to their bosoms, one of Mr. Webster's ideas, that this Union cannot be dissolved. Cannot! It only requires that the Government and the Northern people keep doing a little longer what they have been doing, and it cannot be saved from dissolution. The love of it is dying out fast, under the bitter ailment it gives to the South; and even slow poisons, after long accumulation of malignant power, work to a sudden catastrophe. We have yet to learn that the Southern people, when they lose all hope of a change, will lie down brutally to receive the doom.
