A SONG.

Truce to thy fond misgivings, These fruitless tears give o'er-No absence can divide us, love, No parting part us more! Mountains and seas may rise between To mock our baffled will, But heart in heart, and soul in soul,

We bide together still. Where'er I go, or far or near, . I cannot be alone; Thy voice is ever in mine ear, Thy hand pressed in my own , Thy head upon my pillow rests, Thy words my bosom thrill,

And heart in heart, and soul in soul, We bide together still. And when stern Death shall work his worst, And all our joys are done, and landar E'en by the mystery that unites The dial and the sun; Though one exist in heavenly bliss,

One in this world of ill,

THE WAY TO THE WORKHOUSE. The celebrated comedian, John Reeves, was once accosted by an elderly female, with a bottle of gin in her hand—"Pray air, I beg your pardon, is this the way, to the work-house?" John gave her a look of clerical dignity, and pointing to the bottle, gravely said, "No, madam, but that is."

Yet heart in heart, and soul in soul,

THINGS AS THEY ARE, AND THINGS AS THEY SHOULD BE.

Few are ready to acknowledge that they are very greatly influenced by the sentiments and opinions of others, nevertheless, all of us are so influenced, and to a far greater extent than we are willing to admit.

Men are valued, not for what they really are, but for what they seem to be.

How often do we see one man crouching and bending to another, because, from his supposed wealth, he has gained influence and distinction. But mark how sudden a change ensues. Let the true circumstances of this man be known, and all those crouching, cringing, lick-spittles, desert him in an instant.

instant.

We once knew an ignorant, but self-opinionated booby, who claimed an acquaintance with various persons, distinguished in community for their wealth and influence; but, sad to relate, one day, one of those distinguished ones met with a reverse of fortune, and lo, our famous gentleman, who was formerly so well acquainted with the unfortunate, actually forgot him, and could not pos-sibly recall to mind that he had ever seen

Ah, friends, no matter whether you have any brains or not, do but dress like a lord, and you will be treated as such.

It would be doing violence to the present, apparent, constitution of human society, to stop in the public highway, and grasp thard hand of the green-jacketed methan and drop a word of encouragement to the him in his daily toils. It would'nt be populated because society says so; and if you go coon-ter to what society says, and teaches, you run the risk of its displeasure. So it is. Men are not valued for what they are, but what they seem to be.

This being true, hypocrisy necessarily rurs through seciety, influencing such as possess the desire for admiration, making such endeavor to appear what they are not in order, to gain that approbation which they could not secure by appearing what they re ally are. COURTEOUS REPLY OF AN INFI-DEL. An American traveller being unexpected ly detained at the mole or quarantine of Odessa, wast very civilly offered "half of his apartments, and a sola to lie on," by a young Englishman, who acted as a translator to the mole. After they had formed an intimate mole. After they had formed an intimate acquaintance, and one evening had retired to rest, the traveller asked his hierarch how he could endure the blasphemy which was so constantly heard there. The young Roglishman replied that, "as a gentleman, these things were disagreeable to him, but as to their being intrinsically wrong, it was meantained from the content to him, as he denied the truth of all revelation and helieved Jerus Christ Barry, Bryant & Adams, Wilmington, N. C. of all revelation, and believed Jesus Christ Geo. W. Davis, to be an imposter."

The travaller, without supposing the remark would be heeded except by courtesy, replied. "Either Christ was an imposter or he was not. If he was an imposter, we have the inconceivable phenomenon of a base man practising virtue, self-denial, charity, forgiveness of injuries, through his whole life in spite of scrurging, contumely, and even crucifixion. Is it philosophical to suppose that a bad man would take much pains to make men good? But if he was not an imposter, then he has told the truth and we goust believe him? lieve him !"

lieve him?"

"Is it possible that I have never seen that before?" was the only reply of the young Englishman; but the argument sun: deep into his heart; and when the Iraveller had arrived at Alexandria, he received a letter from the former skeptic, acknowledging him that the best friend he ever had." encouraged him to be equally faithful to others, and praying him not to forget his "Odessa convert.
