THE CODE OF HONOR.

Two young men, one with a leather cap on his head and military buttons on his coat, sat in close conversation, long years ago, in the bar-room of the — Hotel. The subject that occupied their attention seemed to be a very exciting one, at least to him of the military buttons and black cap, for he emphasized strongly, knit his brow awfully, and at last went so far, as to swear a terrible coath.

Don't permit yourself to get excited, Tom,' interposed a friend. 'It won't help the matter at all?

But I've got no patience.'

'Then it is time you had some,' coolly returned the friend. 'If you intend pushing your way into the good graces of my good lady Mary Clinton, you must do something more than fume about the little rivalry that her eye-brows, no doubt-flattered her in verse until she don't know who or where she is—and in this way become a formidable rival. But I won't bear it. I'll I'll-

And the young Lieutenant, for such he was, flourished his right arm and looked pistol balls and death. But he won't fight Tom.'
Won't he? and the Lieutenant's face brightened. Then I'll post him for a coward! That'll finish him. All women hate cowards. I'll post him—yes, and cowhide him in the bargain, if necessary. Posting will do, half sarcastically replied his friend. But upon what pretext will you challenge him? 'Ill make one. I'll insult him, the first time I meet him, and then it he says anything challenge and shoot him. That would be quite gentlemanly—quite according to the code of Honor,' returned the friend quietly.

The young military gentleman we have introduced was named Redmond. The ren-

THE public are hereby informed that I have been appointed egent for the sale of Window Sash, Blinds and Doors, manufactured by the New Happing and could therefore, in the matter of mind, at least, appear to much better advantage than his rival. What was to be done? A mills tary man must not be put down, beaten off, by a mere civilian. The rival must be gotton rid of in some manner. The professional means, was, as has been seen tho't of first Blake most be challenged and then the course would be clear,

A few days after this brave and honorable determination the officer met the author in a public place, and purposely jostled him rude-ly. Blake said nothing, thinking it possible that it was an accident. But he remained near Redmond, to give him a chance to repeat the insult, if such had been his in untion. It was not long before the author was still jostled in a still ruder manner than before, at the same time some offensive word was muttered by the officer. This was in the presence of a number of respectable persons, who could not help hearing, seeing and understanding all. Satisfied that an involve was intended, Blake looked him in the free for a moment, and then asked, lead to be heard all assemble. heard all around-'Did you intend to justle me ?"

I did! was the angry retort.

Gentlemen, never do such things.

As Blake said this with marked em e looked steadily into the officer's face. You'll hear from me, sir. And as the officer said this menacingly, he turned and walked away with a missary
