He is short, stout, sturdy, and energetic. He has a big round ince, and large staring, and very bright ha-zel eyes. His hair is cot short; and his last flung back on the crown of his head. His gate is firm and decided, with a little touch of pomposity. He is ever provided with an umbrella, which he swings and flouriebes, it d batters on the pavement with mighty thumpe. He seems generally absorbed in exciting and impulsive thought, the traces of which he takes no pains to concent. His face works, his lips move and mutter, his eyes gleam and flush. ## TROUT FISHING

TROUT FISHING We have a friend who is a somewhat practical joker, residing in a plensant coun-try residence near the scean. Some time since he had a visit from Professor —, of poetic memory. The professor is a keen trout fisherman, and sceing a pond at some distance from R's residence, he required— 'Can you fish for trout in that pond ?' 'Oh, yes,' said R. 'ns well as not.' 'Possible !--where's your rod ?' 'I have none. I'm no fisherman. But if you want to try, we'll go over. to Sand get tackle, and you may try your hand at It io-morrow."

It was thereupon agreed to do so, and the day was passed by the worthy professor in preparations for angling. The next morning early, R. drove him over to the pond, and he skipped it all around to windward and leeward, and finnlaround to windward and leeward, and links ly waded in up to his waist and threw his flics most skillully, but neves raised a fin-At length as the sun grew tolerably hot, he turned to R. who lay under a tree solucing himself with a book and a cigar, and ex-claimed. 'I don't believe there is a fish in this pond."

'I don't kown that there is,' replied R. Im perturably.

'Why, you told me there was? "Why, you total the intere was," Oh, no,' said R. leisurely turning and lighting another eigar, "you asked me if you could fish for trout here, and I said you could as well as not. I've seen folks do it often, but I never knew of one being crught here."

An unfortunate fellow went to a miss and asked for a garment, saying his objec-was to have something to remember him by 'My friend,' and the miser, 'as the end is to remember me, I shall give thes nothing; for I am sure thou wilt remember a much longer than a gift ?
