Long years have part since first I knew
Or heard, or spake thy users.
But mont'ry hath to knepling yet
Some treasured thoughts I can't forget.
Though I'm not all the sense.

Do not suppose that I've forgot
The friends of other years.
Though I'm not all the cause as ther
Nor full of youthful hope, in when
Lite know no sight or fugits.

No, no. I dannot cast eside The friends I long have known Though others quite as fond be a To give to life its wonted cheer, And flow'rs around are strewn.

This world would be all drear to me A desert sad and cold. If I could not unite again The links of life's oft broken chain. Which speak of friends of old.

Among the well remembered friends, Thy own fair name nath place; A name that cannot be forgot-Which clouds of angulah cannot blot Nor time itself effice; May heav'nly blessings rest on thee,

Where e'er thy lot be cast; And peace divine dwell in thy soul, Which angel tongues have never told,-Till all life's storms are past. I hope that we shall meet above, Where saints and angels are, For there the skies are bright always,

And every harp is full of praise To our Bedeemer there. We soon shall feel the shades of death, And earthly ties be riven; But, O! why should a mortal grieve. These bleak and steril; shores to leave, If moors his back in heaven.

Then let the angry tempest sweep-God "giveth his beloved sleep," Beneath his eye secure.
