ABOUT NAPKINS.

A few days since the Burnet Hotel folks found it necessary to procure another ta-ble servant. After searching in vain for on experienced waiter, they concluded to engage a genteel young Irishman, whose only fault was that he had never seen the interior of a dining room in a fashionable hotel. His duty was laid down to him in plain words, and particular poins taken to instruct him in the part he was expected to perform. Patrick—for certainfy that was his name did so well. He was polite as a Parisan dancing master, and almost as swift in his movements as a locametive. Everybody was pleased with him. pleased with him.

At length, however, a gentleman requested Pat to bring him a napkin. Now this was an article he had never met with in all his life, and to save his soul from purgatory he could not tell what the gentleman meant—His Irish blood forbade him displaying his ignorance, and what to do he could not tell. He wandered up and down the hall, closely observing the movements of his fellow servants, but could hear nor see nothing which came up to his notion of a napkin. Almost in dequir, he same to the conclusion as the best way of getting out of the dilamma. best way of getting out of the dilemma, to tell a jalsehood. Approaching the gentle-man (who had already been waited upon by another servant,) he said—Faix, sir, an' will ye be pleased to take something else, the napkins be ate all up to "Napkins ate up, you are mistaken surely."

"Pon the honor of a gintleman, I be not." replied Patrick in a polite whisper, "gintleman preferred them to the praties, and not a scrap be left for ye."

scrap be left for ye," The gentleman now observed that Patrick was a strange servant, and immediately suspected the truth of the case. The sto was soon passed round the table, and "Put-rick and the Napkins," followed the wine as it passed from friend to friend during the SCHOOL EXAMINATION. A schoolmaster announced to his pupil hat an examination would soon take 'Il you are examined in geography, and he, you will surely be asked what is the shape of the earth; and if you should not re-member, just look at me, and I will show you my sauff box, to remind you that it is round,' Unfortunately the teacher had two snul boxes: a round one which he only used of Sunday; and a square one, which he carrie during the week. The class in geography was duly called out, and the question asked. 'What is the shape of the math?'

The first boy, appalled, in the large ing appearance of the examining countries, fele embarnssed, and glanced at pointed at his snuff-box. 'Sir,' boldly answered the on Sunday, and square all of week !

A COMMAND OF KING MOB. Since the arrival of Kossath at New York, Mr. Howard has displayed from the parage of his establishment (the living House) the Turkish. English, and American flags, the latter occupying the central and most lofty position. On Wednesday, simultaneously with the reception of the Italian Committee. an assemblage of several thousand persons (many of whom came as the representatives of the Republicans of Europe) collected he-fore the house. Considerable boisterousness prevailed, and, in the midst of it, several unknown persons entered the building, greatly excited, apparently, as agents of those outside, and exclaimed, "Mr. Howard! Mr. Howard! There are five thousand persons in the street who are greatly displeased with the appearance of the English flag on your house, and threaten, in case you do not take it down, to remove it themselves." Mr. Howard not knowing the object of the gather-ing and fearing a riotous demonstration, re-plied that he "would remove the English flux, or all of them, or tear down the balcony, if it was desired, for it was always his wish to conform to public sentiment. The flag was forthwith removed, and all evidence of dis-nessed at Liverpool on the Fourth of July last, as follows: "A procession is defiling through the principal streets, carrying banners and dags, while a band of music gives to the air the triumphant anthems of a foreign hind. The same flags are flying peaceably in various directions and in prominent situations. What flag is it that thus flaunts in the wind in England's second city, and what airs are sounding from one end of the town to the other? The stars and stripes of this Union, and the national airs commemorating their independence of England! Does any one tear down the colors and put to flight the musicians? They are as safe as if they were home in America. The enlightened people of Liverpool scorned to interfere with an innocent demonstration made without offensive intentions, but cheered the rival flag as it passed along, even on the day when its ex-hibition might have been construed into an satisfaction ceased .- Journal of Commerce.

A correspondent of the Journal contrasts this piece of intolerance with what he wit-affront. As Mrs. Malaprop says, 'compari-sous are odorous,' so I will make none." JOHNSON AND THE BUTCHER. An eminent carcass butcher, as meagre in his person as he was in his understa being one day in a bookseller's shop, took up a volume of Churchill's poems, and by way of showing his taste, repeated the following line:-"Who rules o'er freemen should himself be free." Then Turning to Dr. Johnson,-
