The Scientific Evidence upon which it is based, it in the highest degree curious and remarkable.

ONLY ONCE

BY MISS ELIZA A. CHACU.

One evening, towards the last of Desember, the family of Dr. Walton est in their pleasant parior, conversing on the anticipated pleasantes of the coming holiday. A ride was engested by one, a parry by another, and but one discenting voice was heard.

Futhus, "said Henry, "I wish you would let me go with William Miles ends the other hoys to Long Fond to than any hearth to the other hoys to Long Fond to than any."

"And pray who sees the other boys be ?? asked the father, laughing.

"Why, father, Charles Ellis, Myron Adams, Philip Hall, and the rest."

"Philip Hall is not very good campony, and I fear 'the rest,' with the exception of Charles and Myron, are of the same disc am willing to gratify you, but I do not sish you to nesociate with any bad boys."

"But let me go, father, only once, "pleaded Henry, "Wa shall have each a fine time, and I shall be so disappointed if I do not go."

Dr. Walton had one weak point of character. He was one of those indefine, case loving persons so often to be assess and being very indulgent with his children, he frequently yielded his better judgment to their solicitations. Henry knew his father's falling, and with the requisite amounts of couring, obtained, as usual, the hybride for consent.

New Year's day came, and Henry set off to enjoy his expected pleasures. A large number of boys were assembled, the importion of which surprise, and as an oath or a sude jest mingled-with their discourse, his check readly bad boys, when not very profitable companions. Henry heard their conversation with surprise, and as an oath or a sude jest mingled-with their discourse, his check readlened with indignation; but or long the harmon fellowed by the profitable companions tell less jarringly on his car, at noon refreshments were brought, and the boys, with a keen appetite, prepared to have really shocked, while a loud and jearing laugh followed his interposition."

To the infinite surprise of Henry, Charles Ellis, and several others, a bottle of intuor was produced; but they positively ashased

"Well, my son," said his recer, when he returned, "how have you suppt the day?"

'Oh, father," replied Henry, "we have he such glorious sport on the loc and down the hill. I wish you had been there to see us."

"Then you have been really happy?"

"Why, father, there were some things—and Heary hesitated a moment, and then added, "you know you said, some of the boys were not very good company, but I kep with Edgar Fergy and Charles Ellis."

with Edgar Fergy and Charles Eilis."

"Well, I am glad you spent the day so pleasantly," returned his father. But Henry felt far from being satisfied, especially when his eister Adaline told him of their beautiful ride, and their visit to a friend, whose green house was filled with rare plants in blossom and beautiful clusters of ripe fruit.

Time passed, and Henry having ones associated with whom he should have avoided found it easy to meet them again. It needed some earnest pleading and the constast promise, "Quly once, father, only this time," to overcome the reluctance of the well-meaning but weak parent. At times he remonwith DESPATCH, all goods consigned to the Propriing but weak parent. At times he remonstrated, but Henry urged as exprestly and seemed to unhappy, that the premise of returning early or keeping with Charles Ellis, at length conquered the wavesing resolution of his father, the thinks he can give satisfaction.
