

THE COMMERCIAL

WILMINGTON, N. C.

TUESDAY, MAY 25, 1882.

FOR GOVERNOR,

JOHN KERR,

OF CASWELL.

FOR THE COMMERCIAL.

TO MISS C. B.

Ah little dreamst thou, of the breach thou hast made...

When first I beheld—wreath in wondrous delight, Thy fair lovely form so comely and rare...

And fair blooms the sweet eglantine, Yet far brighter lustre thy sparkling eyes yield...

HE KNOWS.

In commenting on some remarks of ours, relative to the people's thinking for themselves...

This sounds very well, but it amounts to nothing. Delegates are sent to Baltimore to vote...

We see Mr. Holden knows all about it. That is the way you do, is it? You send your delegates to Baltimore to vote...

A REAL CONVERSATION.

'Sir, said a poor ragged, and rough-looking man, upon whose countenance traces of sorrow and extreme suffering were visible...

'Go along my man, I have nothing for you. You can go the alms-house I suppose. I'll give you a line to the Alderman.'

'Sir, said the poor man, 'I'd rather not go to the alms-house. I only desire a temporary relief. I expect work in a day or two.'

'I am absolutely starving. I am sure you won't miss a quarter of a dollar.'

'Bliss my soul, do you think I gather money from the trees? Go along; don't be pertentious now, do take yourself off, there's a brave man.'

'You owe me money, sir; I would not remind you of the fact, sir, only that hunger makes me desperate.'

'Owe you money?' exclaimed the sleek man, stepping back a pace or two—'You are mad.'

'No, seven years ago I worked for you.—You failed.'

'O! ah! an odd score. O, that's quite another matter. Did it ever strike you that I have taken the benefit of the Act—gone clear through? creditors are no more now! can't touch me!'

'Yet, sir, I earned that money by labor.—You reaped the benefit of that labor—are rich while I am the poor wretch you see.—You owe me that money sir, in spite of all bankruptcies.'

'I never do anything illegal. What is legal is honorable. The law says I don't owe you a cent.'

'Honor say you do, and of the two, honor generally tells more truths than law,' said the mendicant, evidently displeased.

'You are getting wearisome. Will you be kind enough to step out of the way?'

'You call yourself a Christian?'

'I am a Christian, I flatter myself—a deacon.'

'You are esteemed a pious, honest, trustworthy gentleman?'

'I am as good a one as can be found in the religious community.'

'Then the dominion of the evil one can beget of purity when compared with such communities, and the society of thieves is cemented by more real honor. Your respectability, honor, piety and justice, are composed of broadclothes and fine words and go no farther. Keep your money, I'd starve before I'd touch a copper of it.'

'Some years ago the above conversation actually took place in Broadway near the American Museum. A short time ago, the mendicant—now a stove dealer in business—employed his oppressor, reduced to want, as a porter, and after deducting the amount of the dishonorable bill from his wages, when he had earned the amount of the bill, generously presented it to the fallen Pharisee.—This is an absolute fact. Every day of life seems with such remarkable transactions and singular reverses. Retributive justice, sooner or later, overtakes the evil doer, and the ingenuity of man knows not how to avert the merited and never failing punishment.—N. Y. Sun.
