DISTRIBUTION OF OFFICES.

The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun informs us that under a rule now established, by the Secretary of the Interior, and which will baadopted by the Executive Government, the subordinate offices, Clerkships, &c. will be distributed among the several States, in proportion to low three or four clerks for each Congressional district. Congress wishes to have these three or four appointments as a sort of electioneering capital. Each member can promise these offices to their more active political friends.

This is reducing the system to order, and will give less perplexity to Members of Congress, who have the disposal of these gifts, than a general scramble throughout the country. So you see, gentlemen aspirants, that the line is chalked out before you. The more you land taken from on board the "Invoice "the powers that be," and the more you abuse your political opponents, on the stump, in the stores and shops, in the by-ways and on the highways, the greater will be your chance for office and the more patriotic will be your principles of course.
