THURSDAY JANUARY 19, 1854.

ONE SHORT YEAR. In one short year, O who can tell What changes time will bring? The sun will shine as brightly then, The birds as sweetly sing; The flowers unfold their petals fair, And all without be gay, But those we love so dearly now, May then have passed away.

The young may now dream golden dreams The future has in store; But e'er one year hath passed away, Their blissful dreams are o'er; They find that earth hath many wrongs To steel the youthful heart, And make the spirit bow beneath Their earth-depressing art.

The changes vast of one short year, So strangely they do seem,
That we can scarcely deem them aught
But one short mournful dream. In one short year all that we love, May then have passed away:
And we have gone the way of earth,
To realms of brighter day.

AN INCIDENT AT THE NAVY DEPARTMENT. A letter from Washington, in the Petersburg Democrat, says the following incident occurred at the Navy Department on the 4th inst: A young and accomplished lady was to see the Secretary relative to some suspiccremony of her recent marriage with a Lieutenant in the Naval service. She states that some months since she was conducted to a house in this city, and there married to her supposed husband, by a person ostensibly an Episcopal clergyman-that rings were exchanged, and for a short time they lived together, when he was suddenly called off to the l'acific. Doubts have been narrative, Secretary Dobbin, with that energy and uprightness of character for which he is justly distinguished, peremptorily ordered the lieutenant to report, in person, to him, at as early a period as possible. declaring, with emphasis, that if it did turn out to be true that he had practiced a fraud upon the poor gul, his name should be stricken at once from the roll of the

A letter from an officer of the U. S. sloop of war St. Louis, dated Aloxandria, Egypt, Dec. 1st, says:

"Our reception, here was of the most gratifying character, owing chiefly to the the gallant act of Captain Ingraham at Smyrna, and its decided endorsement and vindication by our government, have inspired throughout the East. Two public demonstrations of respect to that commander, to our country, and to its flag, have alreafirst evening; the second at the theatre, to the patent improvement. which we were invited, for the express purpose, as we afterwards understood. On the first occasion, Mr. Jones, late consul, briefly returned thanks to the crowd for the compliment. On the second, the respect paid to Capt. Ingraham and to the flag | secure the highest market price.

(one of which had been prepared, and waved from the box of a party of gentlemen.) was acknowedged by Captain Ingraham and Mr. DeLeon, the new consul general, who was conveyed to his post by the St. Louis, simply rising up and bowing to the audience. Upon the whole, these demonstrations were so significant and so respectable in their character, as to induce the mention of them."

From the New Haven Palladium. OUTRAGE.

We learn that a gross outrage was committed in State street last evening by eight or ten ruffianly fellews, to the great terror of a poor widow woman and her children temporarily living there. We give the story as it was told to us, without vouching for its truth in every particular, though we have no doubt that it is substantially true. It appears that an Irish woman and three or four children were living in a cellar in East street, and suffering from the cold and the little money left by him was kept from her by some person assuming to act as the representative of the husband's interests .-A suit was brought, and the money, a mere trifle, obtained. The reason given by the woman for her bad treatment and neglect was, that she had declined going to the confessional for a year or more. Her brother, not long ago, left the Romish Church and that fact may have lessened her zeal and the faith. Through some connections 20 ples in fine order, just received per schr. H in the faith. Through some connections, Hallock. Fersale by J.H. FLANNER. the suffering condition of this woman came | Dec. 20 under the notice of Mr. Gilbert, proprietor of Gilbert's Hotel, and he took her and her children to a chamber in State street, opposite the market of Messrs. Todd & Carlisle, and clothed the family, and warmed them with fuel of his own furnishing.

Last Sabbath one of the children entered the Sabbath School at the North Church, and the mother, we believe, attended service during the day. Last evening nearly a dozen full grown men. if they deserve the name of men, entered the chamber of this poor woman, and threatened her life For sale at unless she returned to her church and the other influences from which she had escaped, and through fear of her life, as is stated, she yleided. How much credit is to be given to her statements under such circumstances, the public must judge. But Mr. Gilbert and others were at the room immediately after these brave men had left, and found the woman and children apparently in the wildest fright. The police were soon at hand, and have since been seeking for the ruffians, and we trust that they will be successful in finding them .-They will have to be taught that such proceedings will not be tolerated here for an instant. The affair has a very bad look as it now stands. What can be said from the Dec. 17 RANKIN 4 MARTIN.

A FEMALE SENTENCED TO JAIL. Mrs. Margaret Douglass, convicted at Norfolk of violating a statute of Virginia, by keeping a school for colored children, has been sentenced to one month's imprisonment in jail: Júdge Baker, in passing sentence, stated that he did not perceive a single mitigating circumstance in her case, but, owing to the fact that the offender was a female, he would not enforce the rigid penalty of the law. She was accordingly committed to the charge of the jailor, who took her to prison.

AN APALOGUE-BY VIVIA N. Two old Owls lived in domestic quiet in the oriel window of an ancient ruin.—
They had lived there for years, staring at the world with large round wondering eyes, but mingling no more with it than was necessary; their experience of it had made them hermits. If, as would occasionally happen, they ventured into the sunlight, they were blinded and bewildered by the glare, buffeted and insulted by the smaller hirds, who made game of them. And so they secluded themselves in their mossy solitude, and lived there in plump, cosy, downy contentment. A few worms and mice sufficed for food; and for affection, each sufficed to each. One night a Hawk, an old acquaintance of their childhood, flew into their nest -The meeting was cordial with the reminiscences of youth. They talked of old times till the dawn was gray, and the twitter of the smaller birds rose sharp into the morning air. They marvelled, indeed, to see It stands pre-emibright restless eye, his slim legs, and bareases for which it is red plumage, like those of the gay young Bachelor. He told them it was because he had lived. And then he dazzled the old Owl with sparkling narratives of the Of these are Pao- old Owl with sparkling narratives of the in his breast to see something of the varied! forms of life so eloquently described.

Whenever I have ventured out by daylight,' said the Owl, 'the other birds have mocked me; so, thinking I was out of my proper sphere, I returned to my home." That is because you have not boldly ta-taken your position,' replied the Hawk .-'In the world you must take what you w nt--no one gives. When I make my appearance you should see how the birds rush to the nearest wood and and thicket, giving vent to their scandalized terror in various cries!' 'Do they ever fly after you?' Sometimes; but that is only when I've got one of them in my talons. Coming here this afternoon, I carried off the wife of a most respectable partridge,' said the Howk, with a libertine shake of the head. I wanted her, and so I took her. The whole covey followed me, making an uproar like a village of outraged women; They thought I wanted her for my seraglio. Not I-I ate her.' As the Hawk said this, the old Owl looked at him with envy and respect; but his wife 'shuddered,' and thought the Hawk would be a bad companion for her lord .-She was glad when he flew away, and devoutly wished he would never fulfit his promise, of 'looking in upon them' some The words of the tempter dwelt in the old Owl's mind. He was moody, taciturn, abstracted. Visions of the gay life led by Hawks tormented him. The ruin where he had spent so many happy years now seemed to him a monotonous prison; mice and worms seemed now a monotonous regimen; his old wife 'twaddled,' he thought; and he himself felt old, as he thought how much younger seemed his friend. The Hawk had been to Court, and, indeed, was related to the Emperor Engle. Why THE DWELLING HOUSE on Front street, at present occupied by Mr. Geo. H. Kelley. For particulars, apply to T. W. In this mood he saw the Hawk return, and gladly accepted the proposition to 'see life,' in his company; but, afraid of his wife's tears and reproaches, afraid of his own conscience, he dared not tell her of what he was about to do. He slipped away, leaving her dozing on her perch .-She awoke to her bereavement.

It would be a long tale to tell how the truant Owl was disenchanted by reality; how vain his efforts to become a young dandy like the Hawk; how miserable the sunlight made him; how the food disagreed with him; how he went to the Court, and was haughtily disowned by the Eagle, and mercilessly quizzed by the courtier birds; how heartsick and feeble he returned to his old oriel widow, to spend his days in such peace as remorse would leave him.

As he flew homewards all the dear familiar scenes came shooting to his mind, like a breeze from the sea-shore on a feverish brow. The image of his old and lovsorrows had been shared, became an alternate anguish and alternate joy to his troubled heart, filling him with remorse and with hope. As he flew into the ruin a huge and murderous rat slunk away into his hole, licking his bloody lips. As he flew up to his nest a film overshadowed his eyes, for there, before him, lay the mangled body of his murdered wife. He had left her old and unprotected; he found
