

MISCELLANY.

"THE SOULE PAPERS." The National Intelligencer of Monday says: "Under this head we find in the New York Times of Saturday last a somewhat curious statement, which, but for its positive manner and circumstantiality, we should have regarded only as some transient rumor, unworthy of serious attention. Coming to us, however, with this air of authority and in a leading public journal, we think the story of too much interest to be withheld from our readers, although it is calculated to mystify them until more light shall be thrown on the subject. So, omitting some editorial comments and some personal references of the Times to our late Minister to Madrid, not necessary for us to repeat, we subjoin the material points set forth in the statement:--

From the New York Times. "THE SOULE PAPERS--CURIOUS ERRORS.--There is a sort of supplemental correspondence on file between the United States Legation at Madrid and the State Department, which was not sent to Congress with the Ostend Report, but which is, nevertheless, of great importance, and if published would throw a flood of light on Mr. Soule's diplomatic career abroad and his placid conduct since his return.

It will be remembered that before Mr. Soule's return hints were thrown out to the effect that he was coming home in duce, with feelings embittered against the Administration, which had failed to sustain him, and so compressed his diplomatic defeat, and determined to make an expose of the course of said Administration in order to his own vindication. There can be no doubt of the fact that these outgivings were true. Mr. Soule had Madrid in very bad humor. He left Madrid in very bad humor. He had certainly been placed in a very awkward predicament--one that could not fail to involve the most mystification to one of the late Minister's extreme sensitiveness.

But all this suddenly ceases. Mr. Soule reaches Washington, visits the State Department, arranges his correspondence for publication, is freezingly polite to Mr. Marcy and the President, but in mumm as a stone. Even the Cuban Junta can't get him out for the speech in which it was expected he would vindicate himself.

What does all this mean? Where is his secret history of his mission, which was to place in shades the wonderful picture of the splendid advance of the United States towards the acquisition of Cuba and the settlement of the "Black Warrior" and other outrages, and its ignominious retreat?

If we mistake not, this "secret history" was the trump card in the game; and Mr. Soule, much to his surprise, found it in the hands of Mr. Marcy. This history is contained in a correspondence of Mr. Perry, Mr. Soule's Secretary of Legation, with the Department of State, during the Minister's pilgrimage to Ostend. In this correspondence, as we understand it, Mr. Perry complains in substance that Mr. Soule wilfully neglected to secure an amicable adjustment of the Black Warrior difficulty, although his instructions gave him ample opportunity to do so. Mr. Perry also complains that he could himself have arranged all this during Mr. Soule's absence, and precisely in accordance with his instructions from the State Department, but that Mr. S. had enjoined it upon him not even to communicate with the Spanish Government on any of these subjects.

In perusing the above statement, the reader should bear in mind that, in communicating papers to Congress, the President is always, by the terms of the call for them, if not by constitutional right, authorized to withhold any correspondence, or any portion of any, which for reasons of State he may think it proper not to make public.

WE are opposed to betting, particularly on elections, for sundry satisfactory reasons, political, social and moral. But if men must "back their judgments," we commend to them such a wager as two of our citizens have entered into. A friend of Mr. Wise and a friend of "Sam," each equally confident of success, have agreed, after the election, to spend a day on the river, fishing. They are to take with them every thing calculated to make a man feel "jolly." The loser is to sit all day in sight of every thing that can tempt his appetite, but, like Tantalus in the Tartarian regions, not be permitted to touch. He is to catch, cook and serve to his companion all the fish he can, without tasting so much as a fin. He is to mix juleps, and hail storms, without putting a drop in his parched lips. Not a morsel is he to eat, nor a third of the drink from the rising of the sun to the going down of the same. He is to have an umbrella by him, without the privilege of hoisting it, let the sun scorch or the rain drench him as they may. Newspapers and books are to be near, but their contents are to be sealed to him. The winner is expected to make himself comfortable, in any way his tastes or appetites may suggest, but chiefly by beholding the sufferings of his companion. The penalty is as hard as the wager is novel--and we would not, to add a word to our subscription list, be on the "Wise" side of it!
