

MISCELLANY.

LETTER NO. 3.

To Messrs J. A. Wagon and others:
Your 9th paragraph is too long to quote. I will not misstate it. I refer you to it. As a further reason why the Legislature has not power to legislate as desired, you say:

"Society only required that he (man) should surrender what was injurious to her interest and was at war with her own happiness and peace."
There is more propriety in this proposition than anything else you have said, and I propose to assent to it. I feel as if I had hold of something; and really feel a little vexed that you did not stop it, instead of spoiling it with the trash it follows. We could try the whole case by this proposition, if you had let it alone. You say (and I assent) that every right a man had, that would be injurious to society, he surrendered. Well, is the traffic in spirits and is intemperance injurious to society? If they are not, why did you say they are? Shall I repeat your 2d paragraph? If they are injurious to society, then, according to your own showing, he has surrendered the right "without a struggle," and you may restrain him by law. Again: Is the traffic in spirits and is intemperance "at war with his own happiness and peace"? If they are not, why did you say they are? If they are, then, according to your own showing, he has surrendered them "without a struggle," and you may restrain him by law. Now all this is so plain and proper, that I dislike to have to notice what follows. You say: "The right to eat and drink was never surrendered." Say that over again: "The right to eat and drink was never surrendered." Philosophers, defend us! Well, did the memorialists say to the contrary? I presume not. I might have supposed that you did not intend this as a general proposition, but only for the consideration of the Raleigh landlords, if it had not been for the reasons you give--which reasons had almost thrown me into another fit of laughter. You say: "The right to eat and drink was never surrendered, because to surrender them would strip him of his free agency." Why, gentlemen, it would do no such thing; it would strip him of his life!! And change him into a mere automatic machine, do you say? No, gentlemen, it would change him into no such big word as that. It would change him into a lump of clay! "Controlled by the will of the law-making power," do you say? No, gentlemen, it would put him past all control. You do not do your side of the question justice, gentlemen. You ought to speak out and be earnest--you ought to have thrown your whole power into one word--such as that "it would mash him into fits." You conclude this paragraph with the following:

"Your committee believe that the passage of such a law as would satisfy the memorialists, would operate most injuriously to the peace and welfare of the people."

What! Do you think it would produce worse results than intemperance and the traffic produce? Worse than "insanity"--worse than "beggary"--worse than "desolation"--worse than the "untimely death of countless millions"--worse than "ruin to society"? Why, gentlemen, you believe no such things. Your report states the evils carefully considered, which you find would result from the law. Your 10th paragraph contains them. And what are they? "Jealousies and heart-burnings." These are all. And are these comparable to the evils in your 2nd paragraph? But how would it produce jealousy? I can conceive of but one way: A man--a husband and father--has indulged to the full extent of his "craving appetite"--injured his mind, "affected his wife," "beggared his children," "desolated his hearth"--and the law takes from him the right, which he had surrendered to society, to commit these evils, and he regains his mind, cherishes his wife, provides for his children and cheers his hearth--feels like a man, looks like a man, acts like a man; and do you think that all the good women in the neighborhood should have him a little for the change, that the happy wife would be jealous? But how would it produce heart-burn? Are you physicians, gentlemen? But what if it should produce heart-burn? A teaspoonful of soda, or it may be a little vermifuge, would cure it. Why, gentlemen, if it produced the cramp colic, it would be nothing like the evils enumerated in your second paragraph.

With your 9th paragraph you close your constitutional argument!!! Pardon me, not upon the constitution of North Carolina, or any other State or government, but upon your own constitution, greatly shattered by your last winter's privations. Either the subject was too great for you, or else your meals were too small. You were evidently overworked and badly fed. And no one ought to be surprised at the "big-headed," "little-legged," "rickety offspring." I believe I have presented for you every one of your positions, reasons, illustrations and arguments. I think you have failed to show that the Legislature had not the power, and you have shown that the Legislature had the power, claimed by the memorialists. Therefore, but little remains for me to to in regard to this question. I am loath to find that the Legislature might frame an act which would be unconstitutional, but that there would be no difficulty in finding a constitutional amendment. That the Legislature possesses the power to regulate traffic, has never been questioned, and the power has always been exercised. You cannot sell it to slaves. You cannot sell it without a license. You cannot sell it at all at certain times and in certain localities. If you cannot sell without the State giving you a license, may not the State withhold license? If the traffic can be taxed at all, may it not be taxed so high as to amount to prohibition? If the traffic can be prohibited for a time, may it not be for all time? If it can be prohibited at one place, may it not be at every place? If the Legislature can punish with whipping, flogging and death (as I have shown you it can) for delivering a book of evil tendency, why may it not punish in the same way the delivering a bottle of "evil tendency"? I conclude, therefore, that the Legislature had the power to grant the prayer of the memorialists and pass some law "to stay its desolating course--its ruinous effects upon society."

I come now to your argument as to the expediency of legislation, which begins with your 10th paragraph. But you must indulge me another week, in order that I may imitate your example and "carefully consider" the same.

Yours, truly,
PICKLED ROD.
SHARP DEALING.
Some time since a man entered a store to sell some brooms. The storekeeper said he would take the brooms, if he would take half his pay in money, and the rest in goods. The man complied, and after receiving his money, told the storekeeper that he would take for his pay in good half the brooms! The storekeeper thought him a pretty hard case!

On Friday night week the dwelling of Mr. Keller, in Rye Township, Perry county, (Pa.) was destroyed by fire, and his three children perished in the flames. The building was one story and a half high. The children were asleep in the garret and the parents below. The fire was not discovered until the roof had fallen in, preventing the escape of the children.

HEAVY DAMAGES.
Last week a case was tried at Chicago, which resulted in a verdict of three thousand two hundred and fifty dollars against the city of Chicago, for damages caused by a badly constructed sidewalk. The plaintiff was a laboring man, who, on returning from his work, fell into the city trap.
