Now, when the News was publishing letters from W. H. Thomas against the French Broad road, and circulating them amongst members of the legislature, we were electioneering, speaking and voting for it. Which of the two were doing most for the road, is a matter for the public to judge of. We did what we could for it; it did as much as it dared against it, for the purpose of securing a circulation (as it almost acknowledged) in the Western counties. In our article we said we desired very much a rail road connection with Charleston, and so we do, because it is our interest to desire it, and we shall be found among the foremost, according to our means, in promoting that Road,-We are also, strange as it may seem to the small foreign organ, a triend to the H 50 dozen Winsor Chairs; State which gave us birth; may God bless her; we hope whenever we forsake defending her and her interests, that we may sink, if it be possible, into insignificance, as low and contemptible as the Editor of the News has placed himself by his own article. With the general history of the Assyrians, the Israelities, the Egyptians, the Carthagenians, the Greeks, and the Roumns we are already acquainted, and all discoveres made by antiquarians in their researches in those countries, among the rains of ancient palaces, temples, and cit es serve but to illumine some portions of written history that are now dark or illustrate others that are imperfectly detailed. But such is not the case in America. The antiquities of America extend from the shores of the Atlantic to the Pacific ocean, and from the great lakes and British Provinces to Pera and Brazil, in South America. These ruins are not Illusrated or even alluded to by any written history. Their origin is lost to view behind the impenetrable veil imposed by unnumbered cycles of unchronicled centuries. Immense forests over the roins of large enter and the gigantic size of trees, with indications that other generations of trees sprung up and grew and decayed before them, prove that these rules preceded the christian era. Neither history nor tradition indicate the origin or the rise of those vast mounds that are found scattered over the North American continent. They stand in silent grandeur, monuments of a race of people that have long since passed away, leaving no other trace of Member of the Royal College of Surgeons, London; graduate from one of the most eminent Colleges of the United States, and the greater part of whose life has been spent in the Hospitals of London, Paris, Philadelphia, and elsewhere, has effected some of the most astonishing cures that were ever known.
