We copy the following highly interesting article from the Dublin (Roman Catholic) Tablet :--

The "Know Nothing " sect in America seems to have scattered dismay among the Christians of the great republic. Mr. Chandler, a respected member of Congress, has been urged by his friends to defend the Church in the House of Representatives, and he has done so. On the 11th of January of the present year, his fellow-representatives seem to have listened respectfully to his exposition, which was of the Church to the winds ? If the Pope very elaborate, and from his point of view, can forbid a priest to fight, when the civil quite conclusive In Europe, however, the exposition is likely to be criticised; and argument, for the spiritual power does in the though people may respect Mr. Chandler, praise his motives and intentions, they will hardly agree with him, supposing him to have mastered the principles involved in his speech. It is not a pleasant task to repudiate the help of a friend, or to disown dler is too frank and too honest not to concede to others the right he vindicates for himself.

Mr. Chandler's theme was the deposing power of the Pope. He denies its existence independent of a public law of nations. It is not our intention to defend that power at present, for we shall confine ourselves simply to the examination of the reaexistence. But, before doing so, it would be fair to remind our readers that two Popes, celebrated, among other acts noble and heroic, for deposing sovereigns, are numbered with the Saints-Gregory VII and Vius V. These Popes did not think, nor did those who canonised them think, that they had exceeded their powers, or had diverted their spiritual authority into unlawful channels.

Mr. Chandler says that " the whole power of deposing rested upon the consent, not Princes themselves." If this be true there will be permitted. Should circunstances render merely of the Kings, but of the deposed is an end of the question, for if the whole a change in business, or an unexpected removal power rested on the " consent " of Kings terms will be at the option of the contractor, for and Princes, their deposition must have been thatime he has advertised. thoroughly just, because volenti non fit inated an anti-Pope to resist the judge whom they had themselves appointed.

Let the council lay a lax of one cent only upon any of our churches; we will not pay it. Yet we are most obedient Papists." And again: If the Pope were to declare war again t America, and any Roman Catholic, under the pretext of spiritual obedience, was to refuse to oppose this temporal aggressor, he would deserve to be punished for his refusal, because he owes to this country to maintain its rights, and spiritual power does not, and cannot, destroy the claim which the Government has upon him." Now: suppose the Government were to order a priest to fight, would Dr. England have strange that kings should have consented to vest such power in any body, and argues little for their common sense. They must have been always uneasy, and their unea-Mr. Chandler affirms distinctly that the power to depose-power humanly confered-was never called in question by the deposed monarchs. They admitted the Just Published, a New Discovery in Medicine. constitutional right and power, though they may have called in question the justice of the act." This assertion is at least strange, Frederic Barbarossa and Lewis of Bavaria disputed the power most distinctly, and they had an army of scribes, priests and laymen, learned in the law, who maintained that the Pope had no power to depose, and more, that there was no power to de- er infirmities in man. pose other than God's. So far is the doc- FROM THE FRENCH of Dr. B. DE LANEY trine of the deposing power from having been admitted by the deposed monarchs that they wholly denied it, not merely as vested in the Pope, but as actually subsisting in the world.

The deposing power does actually exist at present; is publicly taught in every state that considers itself free. It is the doctrine of Americans, for they deposed George III. It is the doctrine of Englishmen, who deposed James II.; and of Frenchmen, for they have deposed the dynasty of the Bourbons. The Spaniards admit it, for Queen Isabella's throne is in danger. The difference between the modern and the mediæval world consists in this: We vest this in the people, our an-cestors, more wisely, in the Pope. In England, the deposing doctrine is made a law of the kingdom, to be put in lorce whenever the reigning sovereign prefers his soul to the sceptre. Kings, of course, have done their utmost to discredit the doctrine, and they have gained for themselves, instead of it, the scaffold and the sword. The divine right of certain families to govern nations according to their will is refuted, not by argument, but by exile or a violent death. If kings prefer this solution of the difficulty to that which mediæval principles offered. that is their atfair. This, however, is certain, the Pope was more patient and considerate than the people are, and a deposition is less injurious to so-ciety than a bloody revolution. A deposition does not necessarily involve a change of dy- Corner of City Hall Square and Frankfort St. nasty, but in general revolution does; and perhaps kings might, on reflection, prefer to lose the crown to themselves only, to los it for the family as well.

A great clamor has been raised in the world against the power of the Pope to depose wicked sovereigns, but we believe that there would have been no clamor if the power in question had been vested in the Bishops, or even in Archbishops.

Mr. Chandler goes a great deal further-we are sorry to refer to him so often-and trenches on the real spiritual power which he is so anxious to guard inviolate. His words are these; "I deny to the Bishop of Rome the right resulting from his divine ol-fice, to interfere in the relations between subiccts and their sovereigns, between citizens and their governments." It is impossible that he can mean what these words imply. The Pope is at this moment "interfering" in Piedmont. defending one class of citizens there against the government, and yet in the House of Representatives a Christian denies the right. Governments may and do prehib-it good works, and the Pope interferes. They also encourage and commit evil, the Pope in-terferes, and good Christians prefer the Pope's authority to that of the State. They Godless Colleges in Ireland the History Godless Colleges in Ireland, the Hirearchy in England, the trouble of Piedmont—all bear witness together against this unchristian opinion, which must have escaped from the neaker, who did not ponder his words. It is to be remembered, however, that Mr.

Chandler speaks on the authority of others,
