MISCELLANY.

JOHN RANDOLPH OF ROANOAKE
 Sitting one day opposite a gentleman at a hotel dinner-table in Richmond, he observed that he was eating one of those luxurious soft crabs of that region, and that he was the custom of the hotel, a glass of mink had been placed near his plate. Looking up from his own, he said in a thin, piping voice:
 "That's a singular dish of yours, sir, very singular, crabs and milk! I'll bring me a bowl of milk, and crumble some crabs in it!"
 At the same hotel, he said to a waiter, in the temporary absence of Juba, handing to him at the same time his cup and saucer.
 "Take that away—change it."
 "What do you want, Mr. Randolph?" asked the waiter respectfully. "Do you want coffee or tea?"
 "If that stuff is tea, bring me, give me coffee; if it is coffee, bring me tea; I want a change."
 More readers have heard, perhaps, of his reply to a well known and highly respectable gentleman of the South, who introduced himself to him while standing and conversing with some friends with—
 "I should be pleased to make the acquaintance of so distinguished a public servant as Mr. Randolph. I am from the city of Baltimore—my name is Blunt."
 "Blunt, eh?" replied Mr. Randolph. "I should think so, sir; and he desiged him no further notice."
 Equally familiar to many, it may be, will be found his reply to a gentleman who rather forced himself upon Mr. Randolph's notice, while engaged in conversation with others, in a hotel in Virginia.
 "I have had the pleasure of Mr. Randolph, recently of passing your house."
 "I am glad of it," said Mr. Randolph; "I hope you will always do it sir."
 On one occasion at Washington, a brother member of Congress was enlightening Mr. Randolph as to the manner of "shopping" at the capital.
 "The merchants," said he, "have two prices—a asking price, and a taking price." I used to send my wife to make all the purchases for the family, by which we made a saving of fifteen to twenty per cent.
 "I had rather my wife," said Randolph, "bierly, should make a living in any other way but one, than that!"
 Being a confirmed old bachelor the remark was no less comical than serious.
 Scarcely anything more enlightening of Mr. Randolph is recorded of him in any of his biographies, than in the following incident, which occurred on the morning he was to leave for England, on his last visit to that country. The steamer is waiting to convey passengers when his friends call upon him.
 "Mr. Randolph," he says, "in the name of Heaven, what is the matter! Do you know that it is nearly ten o'clock, and that the steamer waits for nobody? Why, you are not even dressed."
 "I can't help it, sir," replied he, "I'm all confusion this morning; everything goes wrong; even my me, ay, has gone a woolgathering. I am just writing a farewell address to my constituents, and I've forgotten the exact words of a quotation from the Bible, which I want to use; and as I quote correctly, cannot close my letter until I find the passage; but, strange to say, I forgot both the chapter and verse. I never was in fault before, sir. What shall I do?"
 "Do you remember any part of quotation?" asked his friend, "perhaps I can assist you with the rest?"
 "If begins," said he, "with how low I loved thee, oh, but for the life of me, I can't recollect the next words. Oh, my head!—There, do you take the Bible and run over that page while I am writing the remainder of my address!"
 "My dear sir," was the reply, "you have no time to do this now; let us take the letter, Bible and all on board the steamer, where you will have enough time to find the passage you want, before we reach the packet."
 After a great deal of hesitation and reluctance, and after much expostulation, the proposition was agreed to.
 A rather cruel test of the affection of his servant John was tried on the occasion referred to. John had in some way offended his master that morning, as he was preparing the trunks. Mr. Randolph said to him:
 "Finish that trunk at once, John, and take it down to the steamer, and on your return, take passage in the Philadelphia; call on Mr. —, in Arch street, and tell him that I have sailed; then go to Baltimore call on Mr. —, in Monument Place, and say that I shall write to him from London; thence proceed to Washington, pack up the trunks at my lodgings, take them with you to Roanoke, and report yourself to my overseer."
 "But you need not obey them, unless you choose to do so. You can, if you prefer it, when you arrive in Philadelphia, call on the Munimission Society, and they will make you free; and I shall never look after you. Do you hear sir?"
 "This unjust aspersion of John's love, was too much for the faithful fellow; his cheeks swelled, his lips quivered, his eyes filled, and he replied in a great agitation:
 "Messa John, this is too hard! I don't deserve it. You know I love you better than any body else, and you know you will find me at Roanoke when you come back!"
 "I felt my blood rising," said Mr. Randolph's friend, and I could not avoid saying:
 "Well, Mr. Randolph, I could not but have believed this, if I had not seen it. I thought you had more compassion for your slaves. Surely, you are unjust in this case; you have punished him severely enough by leaving him behind you, without hurting his feelings." "You have made the poor fellow cry," Mr. Randolph.
 "What?" said he with true emotion, "does he shed tears?"
 "He does!" I replied, and you see them yourself!"
 "Then," said Mr. Randolph, "he shall go with me. John take down your baggage, and let us forget what has passed."

 "I was irritated, sir," he added, turning to me, "and I thank you for the rebuke!"
 Thus ended the singular scene between Randolph and his servant. John instantly brightened up—soon forgot his master's anger—and, in a very few moments, was on his way to the boat, perfectly happy.

NAPOLION.
 Among the numerous anecdotes which are related of Napoleon in Paris, are the following, which are very characteristic of that extraordinary personage. They are well authenticated. Napoleon, shortly after his elevation to the Imperial dignity, when at Brussels, saw, in the window of a clockmaker's shop, a clock which took his fancy. He was at the time unattended, and, in an undress suit, so that it was impossible for any one unacquainted with his person to know who he was. After some general conversation, the clockmaker, who was a violent politician, said something which induced the Emperor, from curiosity, to introduce politics and many minutes had not elapsed before the tradesman indulged in very unqualified abuse of the French Emperor. Napoleon humoured the man, until he heard more against himself in ten minutes than could have reached him in ten years through a regular channel. He then directed the clockmaker, to pack up the clock, and take it on the following morning to the Hotel Bellevue, for Captain Duclos (his assumed name) who would pay for it. The tradesman, true to his time, arrived with the clock, and was ushered into the presence of the Emperor. He immediately saw the error which he had committed, but determined to be firm. "So," said Napoleon you are a politician and indulge freely in the expression of your sentiments." "Sir," replied the tradesman, "there are days when, for the purpose of keeping out the fog with which we are troubled this winter, I take rather more spirits than usual, and the consequence is, that I forget to whom or of what I am speaking." "Eh bien!" said the Emperor, smiling, as he desired his treasurer to pay for the clock, "drink less spirits, and adopt my maxim; never give your opinion of any man until you know who and what the person is to whom you express it."

A BRUTAL MURDER.
 The Lafayette (Ind.) Journal of May 12th gives a particular account of the murder of Cephas Farnbaugh, for the purpose of robbery, and of a subsequent attempt by the perpetrators to butcher the surviving members of the family, whose testimony might have secured their conviction: Failing in this, the intended victims were placed under the protection of a special police. The Lafayette Times says:
 "There exists in our midst an organized band of thieves, counterfeiters and murderers, who have acquired such a degree of boldness and effrontery from the facility with which they have heretofore escaped punishment, that the lives and property of none of us are secure. With the ill-gotten gains by which they command the professional skill of unscrupulous attorneys, they laugh at the law and defy justice, and go on in their evil courses with increasing impunity."
 The following, from the Cincinnati Gazette of Tuesday, shows that the guilty persons have probably been detected:
 "The Grand Jury of Tippecanoe county, Ind., have found a bill of indictment for murder in the first degree, against seven prisoners arrested on charge of the murder of young Farnbaugh. The prisoners have all been arraigned, and pleaded not guilty."

SAD CASUALTY.
 On the evening of the 15th inst., a heavy thunder storm passed over South Bend, Indiana. A two story frame house in Water street, occupied by Mr. Leonard Hains, an old and respected citizen, was struck by lightning, shattering the building, and scattering the materials in every direction, the fluid passing in a lower room where Mr. Hains family were seated, instantly destroying his son William, aged eleven years, and rendering fusible, his son Charles, seven years of age, who died in about one hour's time. Mrs. Hains was slightly injured, her little daughter very seriously, though hopes are entertained of her recovery.

There is an amusing instance of scepticism carried to absurdity, in a person who applied to Mr. Hurwitz to learn Hebrew. He bade the pupil repeat his alphabet after him—"Say Alpha," said the Rabbi. "What is Alpha?" demanded the pupil. "Alpha is the name of the first letter." "How do I know that?" "You must convince me." Mr. Hurwitz caught hold of his ear, and asked him if he knew what the name of that might be? The scholar was confirmed by this process, which may be called the ad captandum form of reasoning.

TERRIBLE TORNADO.
 CHICAGO, May 24.—A tornado passed over Jefferson and Cook counties, Illinois, and other places north and west yesterday, and caused immense damage. A house situated about one mile from the Illinois and Wisconsin Railroad, containing nine persons, was taken up by the wind and scattered in different directions. Four of them were instantly killed, and the others are not likely to recover from injuries received.

SECOND DISPATCH.
 Later accounts from the region of the tornado say the locality has an incredible appearance. It is impossible to leaf the extent of the damage.

DR. JOHNSTON'S INVIGORATING REMEDY FOR ORGANIC WEAKNESS.
 By this great and important remedy weakness of the organs is speedily cured and sympathy restored.
 Thousands of the most Nervous and Debilitated individuals who had lost all hope, have been immediately relieved.
 MARRIAGE.
 Physical or Mental Disqualifications, Nervous Irregularity Tremblings and Weakness, or exhaustion of the mind, should be speedily cured by Dr.
 Johnston.
 Young men who have injured themselves by a certain practice indulged in from youth, or who have frequently learned from evil companions, or at school, the effects of which are mighty felt, even in their mature years, should be cured by this invaluable medicine. It not only cures the marriage indisposition, and destroys both mind and body, but what a pity that a young man, the hope of his country, should be afflicted with his present troubles, and all his progress in life, by the consequences of indulging in a certain secret habit, such as MARRIAGE.
 Should reflect that a sound mind and body are the most necessary requisites, to promote conjugal happiness, indeed, without a sound mind, and through life become a weary pilgrimage; the prosperity hourly darkens to the view, the mind becomes exhausted, and all his efforts, and the necessary melancholy reflection that the happiness of another becomes blighted with our own.

 Skin Diseases Speedily Cured.
 The many thousands cured at this institution within the last ten years, and the numerous important Surgical Operations performed by Dr. J. who have been reported by the press, and by many other persons, testify of which have appeared again and again before the public, is a sufficient guarantee that the afflicted will find a skillful and honorable physician.
