MISCELLANY.

A STRANGE DRAMA IN REAL LIFE. a most extraordinary story. (says the New York Sanday Dispatch) which has given wife and he then informed her that he had rise to no little gossip in a neighboring city, and the chief actors in which have always heretofore been looked upon as persons of the highest respectability. Our columns have often testified to the fact that the most ingenious romance will often full far short of city reality, and never was that truth made more plainly evid nt than in the narrative which we are about to relate. We give the incidents precisely as they were given to us, merely suppressing names, and they are strictly true. · Some months since a family, consisting of a gentleman, his wife, mother, and a house keeper, were living happily in the city above alluded to The gen leman was intelligent, good locoking, and had not yet passed the meridian of life, while his wife was also young, well educated, and of refined manners. She had borne her husband two children, of whom they were motally very fond, and the husband and wife were started some hours previous for a distant looked upon by their most intimate friends city, accompanied by the housekeeper and as a happy couple. Indeed there can be ro doubt that they were happy: and, but her (the wife's) children. She also learned, human character which sometimes startle been married some three monath before. for an exhibition of these dark phases of the mortal world, they would have remain-

A short time since, the wife, who had relatives in Europe, expressed a desire to visit them, and the husband, always willing to gratify her, engaged passage for her, and she departed. Things went smoothly enough for some time after she had gone, but at length the mother of the husband thought that she discovered signs of too much familiarity between her son and the housekeeper. She was not willing to beheve the evidence of her senses at first; for the housekeeper, besides being no great beauty, had possed the hey day of youth, having reached the matrecly age of about forty five. It was not long, however, before the mother's first aroused suspicions were fully confirmed, and she at once wrote a letter to her daughter-in-law, stating the facts and advising her immediate return .-The wife was not willing to believe in her husband's infidelity-and, under the ide. that there must be some mistake in the matter, she addresed a note to him, revealing what she had heard, though expressing her disbelief in the story. She wound up, however, by expressing a desire to return home, and requesting her husband to send her money for that purpose. No attention was paid to her letter, and she thenbegan to get really alarmed; -- so, raising what money she could from her friends. she took passage for home. On board the vessel in which she sailed, she met with a a young man whom she had known from childhood, and who had been a suitor for her hand previous to her marriage with her first husband. - As she was alone he assumed the protection of her, and dur ing the passage paid her every attention which a brother would show to a sister. She arrived at her some safely, and immediately took her way to her former residence, when she was terribly shocked to learn that her husband had sold off all his effects, and with his children, was living with the housekeeper. Filled with agony, out delay. she sought out her mother-in-law, who had taken up her residence with another son, and she learned that what she had heard was too true. The old lady informed her that her husband had indeed taken up his abode with the housekeeper, but that he had kept his residence a profound secret. In a state bordering upon frenzy, the unfortunate woman was about to rush forth. in search of further information, when, sin gularly enough, her faithless husband entered the room He quailed before the glance of his injured wife, whom he had thought still in Europe, and when she appealed to his feelings us a husband and as a father, and asked to know why be had St. Nicholas Hotel, and offers to travelers surgators thus deserted her, he merely replied that he could not help himself-that he would pace no obstacle in her way to a divorce, and that her best course would be to marry the young man who had accompained her home (for she had informed him of the particulars concerning the passage.) To this she replied that she did not wish to part from him; that he was her husband and the father of her children-that if he had done wrong she was wiffing to forgive him, to torget the past, and to think only of the future. He rejoined that the thing was imposible-that he would do all he could for her in a pecuniary view, but that he never could live with her again; and thus the in-

Subsequently, the husband procured a boarding house for his wife and called oc--casionally to see her, but to all her entreaties to be allowed to see her children he turned a deaf ear. At length, driven to desperation, she determined to follow him, and as he was about leaving her at the close of one of his visits, she put on her bounet and informed him of her design,-He argued, expostulated and threatened but to no effect-go with him she would. For a long time he walked up one strent and down another, but at length, when he found it was impossible to shake her off, he told her that if she was determined to go, she must, but that she would regret it .-She replied that she would not suffer any greater agony of mind than she had already endured, and shortly thereafter she found herself in the presence of her little ones, and the destroyer of her happiness.-The meeting between the eldest daughter and the mother was affecting in the extreme. For a moment the poor woman forgot all her sorrow in her joy at once more beholding her children; but she was seen brought to a serse of her condition by the housekeeper, who commanded the husband to drive her from the house. Fired with indignation, the wife reterted by, demanding the keys of the establishment -The husband meanwhile was apparently The husband meanwhile was apparently stricken dumb, and knew not which way to turn, but at length he fied the premises, leaving the women together. ble physician TAKE NOTICE. TAKE NOTICE.

It is with the greatest reluctance that Dr. JOHN-STON permits his card to appear before the public, deeming it unprofessional for a physician to advertise, but unless he did so, the afflicted, especially strangers, could not fall to fall into the hands of those impudent, boasting imposters, individuals destitute of knowledge, name and character pedlars, shoemakers, mechanics, &c., advertising themselves as physicians; ignorant quacks; with filtry, lying certificates of Great Wonderful Cures from persons who cannot be found, or obtained for a few dollars from the Worthless and Degraced, and many other cunning and contemptible artifices to entice the afflicted, trifling month after menth, or as long as possible, and in despair, leave you with ruined health, to sigh over your galling disappointment.

It is this motive that induces Dr. J. to advertise, for he alone can cure you. To those unacquainted for he alone can cure you. To these unacquainte with his reputation, he deems it necessary to so that his credentials or diplomas always hang in his business, to merit a continuance of that patronage heretofore so liberally bestowed upon him.
