SAM WINTON'S CORN SPECULATION. [We no not mean by inserting the fol-Winton's "corn speculation." It may serve, however, to make a laugh, and aford farmers a useful lesson as to how the commission business is sometimes carried on .- Saturday Evening Post.] "Did I ever tell con," said Sam Winspec of mike on the Wabash?"

I shook my head. "You see, Bob," began Sam, "the thing with a certain individual of my acquaintance, Sam," I remarked.

"Prezactly," said Sam. "Well, I was hard up and wonderner bou bear make the small statuount of capital tel to the tallest advantage, when on taking up a newspaper, I saw a windy aragraph on the advantages of salverusing. The article went to illustrate how many fellers had made their piles out of the meanest capitals simply by dvertising, and I determined at wunce, pertickle ly as I had raised an idea from the subj ck, that it was the way for me ter go about it."

"What was the way? I inquired, not comprehending him. "By advertising," returned Sam. "Yes, well; you said something ahout going about it. Going about
