JOE BLUNT'S FIRST GAME OF L00.

RICHMOND, VA., 1855. Edvor of the "Spirit of the Times."-Now Joe Blunt was a young man who had growed up with good teachings (I'm jist telling you as Uncle Joe used to tell it on himself) Well, by hook or crook, or how-somever, he got 'quainted with a set of name. wild fellows, and, said they, 'Joe, don't you want to know how to play Loo?' A what's Loo?' sez I.

Joe, a pretty little game at cards can't lose anything at it. S'pose you try it, Joe, I known you knows how to play seven up, and we'll teach you how to play

Well, sez L 'l'll go in'
Now you see there was Dick Duke and treat thick headed chap named Carter Weaver-so we sat down I had bout five lollars, and they 'bout the same. We 'gan to play it at ten cent and a quarters (you see I learnt it then, and I can tell it to you straight,) and 'fore long all the change I had was up, and thern too. 'Twas my deal and I turned up the six of hearts-1 never shall forget it-for trumps. I raised up my hand, and there, looking me right in the face, was the ace, king, and queen.
Of course you tuk the cakes then, Uncle Joe, sez L Let me tell you how 'twas .-Sez I, 'boys, it's no use of playing these pape's I'm got it, sure.' I was 'bout raking down the stuff, when that swell headed Carter Weaver sung out- Hold on, Joe, my boy, you aint got it yet; not so

How come I aint? says I. Play 'em out,' says he, 'and I'll show

Same thing, sez I, and I popped down queen fust, and he put down the ten t (he called it jail widows) Then I let him have the king, and he put down the nine spot—and said I, laughing, 'In course you can't beat the ace.'

'There,' said he, 'this must be a foul deck, for darn me if I wunt jist playing off on Uncle Joe, for I've got the ace of hearts myself'-holding down a card with his than he has done in the few sentences quotwo thumbs on the ends-'It's right hard ted above. case. Jue, but you see my ace.'

"Count the cards,' said I, 'count the er's ace, I can't help laughing at my greenness, but whew! boys, I'm some now -that is, folks tells me so.

Well, I vowed I git even with that crab, Carter Weaver, so one court day I puts at Carter for a game of Loo. Of course he said 'yes,' for he 'spected to pluck me agin. So we sot at it, Carter and me, and two other boys, and after a while we got at a smashing loo. I kept my eye on Carter and seed him crib the ace of clubs, and lay it on his knee, and pretty soon he got the king and queen too. I never said a word, but the very next deal up comed a club for trumps, and Carter knocked the table hard for a stand. 'Well,' said he, sich cards as these is like stealing your money, boys.'

"I'll stand,' said I, and I slipped my hand onto Carter's knee and tuk off the ace, king, and queen, and put my hand in its place. I watched Carter, and he quietly put his hand down and tuk up the other. Carter had the lead, and with a broad grin on his ugly face, sez he, 'Come to this one-playing from the back-and down come the deuce of hearts and I mounted it with the queen of trumps. You ought to have jist seen Carter's face then; it looked as long as a garden rail; 'and here's the ace and king too, sez I, raking down the pewter. Carter looked all round the table, and sez he, dryly, 'Gentlemen, I'm goin' to quit, there's cheating goin' on here.'

'I thought so, too, Carter,' said I, 'when you found them two aces of hearts in that pack last week." · Let's play on,' said one of the other

looking as huffish as an old maid. Now, boys, didn't I gather old Carter that pup! And we all used to tell Uncle Joe that he did sure and he'd take a few more whiffs at his pipe and leave us with

J. T. G. A STEP BACKWARD.

A New York journal, in a sudden glow of radical inspiration, has just revived a doctrine which a certain char cter known in history by the name of Jack Cade attempted, unfortunately for himself, to introduce practically in England some four hundred years ago—namely, the proscription and suppression of "EDUCATED POLITICIANS"—
The journal to which we refer we are unable to name, because its name is not given by the paper into which we find the sentient copied and from which we quote it, country has tried educated politi ians for the three or four Administrations past, and had most wretched, imbecile, or, retrogressive Governments as think natural) consequence. He ided by the writer (continues our orary) that the people may do bet decting from among themselves farechants, merchants, and others, in to lawyers, who generally con-bulk of 'educated politicians'" he first thing we do, let's kill

"All. He hath confessed; away with him; he's a villain and a traitor.

"Cade. Away with him, I say; hang him with his pen and inkhorn about his Henry VI. It is not very long since we had occasion to rebuke the avowal of the same doctrine by no less a personage than the present Governor of Tennessee, who, emulous possibly of the fame of his great prototype of the fifteenth century, undertook, in his inaugural message, to contemn the value of education in public men. We had hoped that this bright idea of the dark ages had by no less a personage than the present that this bright idea of the dark ages had been confined to his Excellency, but find that it is not.

A Baltimore contemporary in commenting upon the New York article has some er the property is owned by the advertiser or by other persons. These are excluded by the term excellent remarks, but we think he has not exactly hit the point at which the New York writer seems to aim. It is not so much to lawyers he objects as to educated men in our public councils. "The first JOB, CARD AND FANCY PRINTING, thing we do, let's kill all the lawyers," not because they are lawyers, but because they are supposed to be men of education. After we have committed this wholesome wholesale murder, let us make diligent search for every man who can read or write, for this will show that he has had the elements of education, and "hang him with his pen and inkhorn about his neck." The most appropriate answer, therefore, that can be given to the jacobin sentiment that we have "tried educated politicians long enough" is that which the great master of human motive has furnished in his history of Jack Cade's rebel ion. If his prophetic vision had embodied before him the New York or the Tennessee politician he could not have painted him more to the life

After the foregoing remarks were writcards, And I did count the cards, and ten, we have seen, with as much surprise let's all take down the pot,' says Carter, 'and divide equally.'

'All right,' sez I; and so little did I know then 'bout the things that I never 'spected that that scoundrel, Carter Weaver, had the true of hearts believed to the first state of the true of hearts believed to the true of the t er, had the truy of hearts between his of Pennsylvania, has felt himself bound to tra Crescent Brandy, from Custom House, Wilthumbs. When I think of Carter Weav. obey the Co stitution of the United States very error of the moon; she comes more near the earth than she was wont, and makes men mad." It is bad enough, in all conscience, to have a State Judiciary elective; bu if the time is ever to come when the Supreme Judicial Tribunal is to be composed of men chosen by and dependent on the vacillating favor of the populace, then, indeed, shall we have taken a fatal step backward - Nat Int.
