MISCELLANY.

PLEASURES OF A CITY HOME WHILE THE FAMILY ARE IN THE COUNTRY. The following not altogether unprecented, though amusing experience, we and recorded in the Courier des Etats

Unis of Saturday morning : Mr. X. (no one is comprised by this nitial) occupies a house in the vicinity of Astor Place, furnished with every thing that can contribute to comfort and good living. According to his custom, he took up his residence, in the month of June last, in a cottage on the North River, within reach of his business, which called him to the city almost ev ery day. The family and servants being once settled in the country, the mansion in the city remained closed.

Madame X., who had no occasion to wesses, through all the severe trials of the come to New York, often advised her husband to go and visit the neighborhood of Astor Place-)we will suppose that this is Layfayette Place,) and see if everything there was in order. Mr. X. promised never to fail; but the railroad conveyed him clear to Chambersrights. But, alas ! there is Jamaica, and there is Hayti ! Which would our Seward philanthropists have Virginia to be ?of his time. To go up town on purpose to inspect a deserted house, seemed to will Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe be good him nothing but lost time. He dispensed, therefore, with following the advice Norfolk and Portsmouth to their masters of his wife, always promising himself at heart, however, to conform to it anothand mistresses, as illustrated in hundreds er time.

At evening when he returned to Yonof protection and dependence are thus beaukers-(we will suppose this to be Yontifully developed, there must be something kers)-if Madame X. asked of him the news from the city mansion, in order to avoid reproach, he would affirm that he ry, after all. It passes all human philosophy. . had visited it; that he had examined, with the greatest care, to see if every thing was in order-"all right," he had found nothing disturbed. Upon this, Madame X. blessed the police of New-York, and glorified its uniform, which 'Mr. Black, you are the only person who comes to see me who forgets who I am.' inspires such a salutary terror in the The editor opened his eyes with astonishthieves. Thus passed the summer. A ment. "Somebody has said to you that I have not visited the house a single time during the summer. Well, very good ! If that were the case, would there be any occasion for taking the matter so much to heart, and showing oneself so much offended ?"

"No one ever said to me anything of the kind," resumed Madame X. with emotion. "But if any one had said it, I should have conclusive reasons for not believing it."

"How ! You have reasons for believing that I have not visited the house, perhaps?"

'Alas! I have only too many of them. For example ! see there, what is too convincing !"

Without deigning to push the discus-tion further, Madame X. took her hus band by the hand, and led him into a room attached to the dining-hall, and which had remained shut all the morning. "Look there," said she. M. X. looked stupified. The entire floor and shelves were covered with empty bottles, and porcelain, all in disorder; several broken pieces were heaped up in a derstand a single word of all that you have been dealing out to me." Then commenced a tedious and inter-nable explanation, from whice it re sulted as follows :

Some impudent rascals, or some rouish wags, well acquainted, at it ap-ears, with the customs of M. X., had roduced themselves into the house by ans of false keys, immediately after departure for the country. They had tled themselves there, and, with in-edible audacity, they had aviled theme of the services of those who had furnished the household of the absent roprietor, finding nothing too good for m having no regard, as one may ca. elieve, to the expense, and not aof their bills lead them to fear a discov-
