MISCELLANY

great large room, as big as a meetin' house -lighted up with smashin' big lamps covered all over with gless hangings. The ladies looked as nice as little angels, their laces as white as if they had dipped them into a flour barrel; such red cheeks I han't seen in all Sleepy Hollow: their arms all covered with gold bands, chains, and shiny looked come kiss me' all over; their eyes looked like diamonds; their waists drawn to the size of a pipe-stem, and made to look like they were undergoing a regular cutting-into operation by tyin'a string tight round 'em; and their bosoms-O, Lordy! -all covered up in laces and muslins; they rose, then rose again, like-O! I don't know what it was like, exceptin' the breath n' of bag, with its breast just out!

After the gals and youngsters had walked round and round for a considerable spell, the music struck up-and such music! It was a big horn and a little horn, a big flute and a little flute, a big fiddle and a little fiddle, and such squeakin', bellowin', grounin'. I never heard before; it was like all the rats, pigs, and frogs in Christendom had concluded to sing together. They call it a German Poker. I 'spose it was made by some of them Cincinnati Germans, in Old Dominion. imitation of the squalin' at a pork packery, and I guess it was a pretty good imita-

So soon as the music struck up-such a them right smack up in kissin' order, with for women: the gals, bosoms agin their bosoms, and the gals' chins restin' on the fellers' shoulders. At this, the gals begun to sorter jump and caper, like they were agoing to push them away; but the fellers just caught hold of the other hand and held it off, and began to jump and caper too, just like the gals.

I swon upon a stack of bibles you never seed such a sight! There was some two dozen gals he'd tight in the arms of them fellers-they a rarin' and jumpin' and pushin' 'em backwards over the room, (as I thought, tryin' to get away from them.) and the fellers holdin' tighter and tighter, it was very natural that I should take the gal's part. So my dander kept a risin' higher and higher, till I thought my biler would bust unless I let out some steam. I bounced smack into the middle of the room,-Thunder and lighting! every-body come here with shot-guns, six shooters, and butcher knives !' bawled I at the top of my voice; for I will be shot if any dod-blasted, longbearded fellers shall impose on gals that ar way where I am ! and I was just going to pitch into 'em promiscuously, when my merchant caught me by the arm, and said, 'Stop, Ben.' 'I'll be cussed,' says I, if I will see the wimmin folks imposed on! Look what them fellers are doin', and how hard the gals are ramn' an pitchin' to get away from 'em! Do you 'spose I can stand still as a mile post and see gals suffer so? Look I says I, there is a gal almost broken down, ready to give up to that 'rangotang of a feller ! Yonder is another so faint her head has fallen on the bosom of the monster! I tell you I was ashy; I felt like I could jump into them like a catamount

When I looked into my merchant's face. I thought he would have busted. He laft and laft, and squatted down and laft .-'Why,' says he, 'Ben, that is nothing but the the red war waltz they are dancin', and them gals aint tryin' to get away from them fellers-they are only caperin' to make the fellers hold 'em tighter, kase they like it. The more the gals caper, the tighter they wish to be squeezed. As to layin their heads on the fellers' bosoms, that's very common in this city. They expect to be married some of these days, and they want to be accustomed to it, so they won't be a blushin' and turning pale when the parson tells the groom to salute the bride. There is nothing like being used to such things. 'You may take my hat,' says I to my merchant. 'I was tuck in that time.' I tell you though, it was the first time I ever seed the like before. I have seen the Indian hug and the Congo dance, but I tell you this red war waltz knocks the hat crown out of everything I ever seed.

Arter I had got out of the way, and everything commenced goin' on again, the music got faster and faster-oh, it was as fast and furious as a northwester! The gals rared agin', the fellers'hugged tighter, and the music makers puffed out a blowin' Then the gads and fellers spun round like so many tops run mad. The fellers leaned back, and the gals leaned to em; the gals' fine frocks sailed out and popped into the air on a windy day, the fellers coat tails stood out so straight that an egg would not have rolled off; their faces were as fixed and as serious as a sarment. Around they went; it makes me dizzy to think of it. Pop went the coat tails, crash went the music, and pitty-patty, rump-dumple-de-thump went the feet or all. By and by. as beautiful a craft as ever you seed in the shape of a woman, laying close up to a long bean-pole looking feller, came sailin' at the rate of fifteen knots an hour down our way, whilst a fat, dumpy woman, and a hump-shouldered beef eatin' sort of a feller at the same speed went up the other .-I seed there was to be some bumpin', and naturally trembled for the consequences Sure enough—ca-whallop, they came to-gether, and slap-dash, the whole on 'em fell-flat in the middle of the room, carrying along with them everybody standing place, hant occurred before or since old father Noah unleaded his great ark.—

There was legs and arms, white kids and shoestrings and garters, neck ribbons and THE CRI-WEBALY COMMERCIAL guard chains, false curls and whiskers, women's bustles and pocket-hardkerchiefsall in a pile-the gals kickin' and the fellers gruntin' and apologisin'.

'Oh, Lordy !' says I-for I was consilerably flustrated at the sight-stop that music, blow out the lights, or all hands shut their eyes till these wimmen folks get unmixed!' At this, such a laugh you never

Why, Col Johnson, says my merchant, that is nothing; it frequently happens, and is one of the advantages of the red war wallz. If the gals aint learned how to mix with the world, how can they ever get

'I would rather have 'em all a little mixed,' says I; but that is too much of a good thing. However, let us leave; for I seed enough of the Sorry in that pile just now to satisfy me for a week;" and at that we bid 'em good night, and left, promising to a snowy white goose, chucked in a tight go to the next one and take a few lessons in the common Poker and Shoutish dance. How I came out, may be I may tell you in another letter.

I shall take pleasure in furnishing all who may give me a the fellers holdin' on to 'em tighter; and they squeezed the gals, till at last I begun to think the thing was being carried too far for fun. I was a little green in these matters; and seein' the gals tryin' harder and harder to get away, as I thought, and the fellers holdin' tighter and tighter, it was Tubs, Half Bushels, Nests Measures, Tubs, Pails, Lorillard and Dill's Snuffs, lok, Gun Caps Grind Stones and cranks for same, Solar Sperm Candles, Well Buckets, Srives, Axe Helves, Cords, Plough Lires, Roll Pins, Ground Coffee, Cinnamon, Spice, Pepper, Ginger, Nutmegs, Yenst Powders, Axes, Poinsh, Irish Pointoes, Onions, Codfish, &c., &c.
