

MISCELLANY.

MONEY BELOW PAR.

OR, THE JACK-KNIFE VERSUS $20,000.

A ship was driven out of her course, and cast away within sight of an unknown coast. All on board might have escaped in the boats, though rather crowded, but one of the passengers, on their refusing to admit his trunk in any boat, remained in the ship to unfasten it and get out his pocket-book, which contained notes to the amount of $20,000.

Catching at some article that was floating by, he clung to it almost unconsciously, not relaxing his hold even when his senses were failing. Fortunately, he was floating to land, and when he revived, he found himself lying on the beach. As soon as his strength returned, he ascended an eminence, but could see no sign of the wreck, or boats, or any human creature.

Why, I don't know, but I suppose they are safe by this time, but I have seen nothing of them. 'Were you with them in the boats?' 'No, I stayed on board to the last.'

'And so did I, though I was not aware of your being aboard. I hope you succeeded as well as I did in saving your property.'

'I had nothing to save but a jack-knife and a plug of tobacco--both safe enough in my trousers pockets.'

'Then why did you not think of saving yourself at once?' 'No, I could not think of leaving the ship as long as the planks held together. She could not say that I was not true to the last. But, come, comrade, let us see what kind of quarters we have got into.'

They travelled some distance without any sight of a habitation. Necessity quickened their ingenuity; they were successful in occasionally catching fish, oysters, or birds, in all which the sailor's jack-knife proved of invaluable service, in preparing the proper snares and weapons, in opening the oysters, cutting up, or cleaning the fish or birds, above all, in striking a light to make a fire for the purpose of cookery.

Once, when they were attacked by a wild beast, the sailor, by a prompt use of his jack-knife, saved their lives.

They had lived in this manner for some months, when arriving at the opposite side of the island, they found it inhabited by savages, who conducted them to their king.

The gentleman, anxious to conciliate his copper-skinned majesty, produced a five hundred pound bank note, and politely offered it to his acceptance. The king examined it with some curiosity, applied it to his nose and tongue, and being satisfied that it was not good to eat, returned it with content. The gentleman soon found out that his twenty thousand pounds could not procure him the smallest consideration.

The sailor, on the contrary, in a few days became a personage of great importance, for the many services which he was enabled to render with his jack-knife, among a people where iron was unknown. They liberally supplied all their wants, and his rich friend was glad to profit by his bounty.

One day as they were attending the king on an eminence overlooking the sea, they descried a distant sail evidently passing the island. They kindled a bonfire and hoisted signals, but they did not succeed in attracting notice.

'If we only had a boat,' exclaimed the sailor, 'I think we could get within hail, and she does not stand far out, though it is plain she intends to pass without touching this way.'

The gentleman produced his twenty thousand pounds, and offered it to the king in exchange for a canoe, but his majesty rejected the roll of paper, and turned to the sailor with a single word--'knife.' The bargain was immediately closed, the jack-knife was received by the king with no less delight than was experienced by the Englishman as they jumped into the canoe. By dint of hard padding, and a favorable current, they got within hail and were taken aboard of the ship, which proved to be an English vessel homeward bound.

As they came in sight of the white cliffs, the gentleman took the sailor one side and handed him two notes, which amounted to a thousand pounds and said--

'You must not refuse to accept this, for you have done for me more than twenty times as much as I could have done for you, as useful as your jack-knife has been, I have learned by this time that a man's wealth is to be measured not by the extent of his possessions, but by the use which he possesses.'

'Your stairs are very dark, Mr. Dunson; do you think I can find the bottom?' 'Nothing easier, my dear madam. All you have to do is to let go the balusters and make a tumble.'

A HOME.

If we were to tell numbers of our friends that they do not know what a "home" is, they would grow somewhat indignant--perhaps use hard words. And yet it may be remarked that the number of persons who know what a genuine home is, by experience, is surprisingly few. One man in good circumstances will tell us that he has a fine house of his own in which every comfort and convenience are provided. He has a wife and children there also, and they give life to the place. Very true. But does he prefer that house, thus furnished and enlivened, to every other place in the world? Does he sigh when the hour for leaving comes, and smile when he is permitted to return? Does he love to sit by the cheerful fire and fuddle the children, entering into all their little disputes with a curious interest? Does he take particular notice of the birds in the cage, and the cat near the fire? If not, he has no home, in the dearest sense of the word. If his mind is altogether absorbed in the dusty ways of business--if he hurries from the house in the morning, and is loth to return at night--if, while he is at home, he continues to think of the journal and the ledger, and repulse the advance of the prattling children, he has no home; he only has a place where he lodges and takes his meals.

Ah! happy is he who knows and appreciates the full bliss of home; whose heart is warmed and harmonized by its cheerful influence, and who feels how superior in purity of pleasure are all its enjoyments to the turmoil of outdoor life. Three happy is such a man. He has discovered the only paradise this world can afford. It is only such a man who can have a deep and sincere pity for the unfortunate creatures who are homeless. He regards them as being cut off from the best influence of the earth, and exposed to the action of all the darker waves of life. He feels keenly for him who has no fireside--no odor on his tongue to soothe him when heavy cares have troubled the mind and rendered his heart sore; and the sympathy of such a man is not slow to overflow in acts of benevolence. A good home is the source of the fountain of charity in the heart.

Our advice to those who have no homes, such as we have described above, is to get them as soon as possible. They can never be contented and substantial citizens, nor thoroughly happy men, until they follow this counsel. Get homes. Fill them with the objects of love and endearment, and seek there for the pure lights which the world besides cannot afford.

He who is accustomed to commune with himself in retirement, will sometimes at least, be impressed with the truths which the multitude will not tell him.

DOCT. JOHNSTON, BALTIMORE LOCK HOSPITAL.

WHERE may be obtained the most speedy, pleasant and effectual remedy in the world for the following diseases: Gonorrhoea, Gleet, Stricture, Scirrhous Weakness, Pains in the Loin, Constitutional Debility, Impotency, Weakness of the Back and Limbs, Affections of the Kidneys, Palpitation of the Heart, Dropsy, Nervous Irritability, Diseases of the Head, Throat, Nose, & Skin, and all those serious and melancholy disorders arising from the destructive habits of Youth, which destroy both body and mind. Most of our patients are afflicted with the most distressing symptoms, rendering marriage, &c., impossible. YOUNG MEN. Especially, who have become the victims of Solitary Vice, the dreadful and destructive habit, which annually sweeps an untimely grave thousands of young men of the most exalted talents and brilliant intellect, who might otherwise have advanced brilliant careers in the various professions of the law, medicine and letters, and who, by the use of our medicine, are restored to the enjoyment of the life, may call with full confidence. MARRIAGE. Married persons, or those contemplating marriage, being aware of physical weakness, should immediately consult Dr. J., and be restored to perfect health. He who places himself under the care of
