MISCELLANY.

MEMORIES OF PASHIONABLE LIFE. It is alone after death we hear all that was good in an individual. It is alone after death we hear all that was infamous in an age. Hervey's celebrated memories of George II. dragged to light the filtby heap of swinish sensuality in which the aristo cracy of England wallowed with azy voluptuousness during that obese German's beign. Huish's no less pelebrated memories of George IV. exposed in lurid color, the sensuous proftigacy, and shameless heartlessness, the absence of all honor, virtue and truth, which marked every act of that 'first gentleman of Europe,' and all the other first gentlemen and ladies around him. The character of the present sovereign of England stands out in a broad and delightful relief to that of many of her predecessors; but the aristocratic circles of England have unfortunately not all caught the reflection of her pure character and domestic virtues. The memories of which have torn off the graceful robe with which fashion endeavored to veil the hideons sore, and laid bare in its native corruption the tetal absence of principle and morally which prevails among many of the most select of the select society of England.—
Lady Blessington's life is full of romantic and fushionable incident to fix the attention of the silly sentimental. It is also full of starrling social suggestion, furnishing thought to the philosoper and reformer. Let us suppose that a girl from the conn-try destitute and poor, but with buoyancy of spirit, and vivi tness of imagination, listens to the gluttering glib of some young Lothario-is seduced, and after a little while deserted. Immediately she is shunned by the honest mechanic, by the virtuous tradesman, by all of the village to which she belonged, and cast forth with the mark of Cain upon her brow. Such is the rule among what is fashionably called 'the people.' Why is this girl thus driven forth upon the cold bleak common of life? Not that the heart of the laboring many does not own a kinder impulse than that of the idle few-not that the people love that poor outcast less but that they love the virture of woman more; that virtue which, however sneered at by the scoffer, is society's protecting care and guardian crown. Misery and want make the outcast's outward life as wretched as shaine and cruelty make her inward life unbearable. Her original buoyancy of spirit and vididness of imagination are not gone, but they only serve to clothe her fall with a picture of gloom as they clothed her short falls and sinks, deeper and deeper. The fate and history of such a girl find no bril liant recorder. No letters are showered upon her full of silly sighs and curiously smoothed nothings. And yet, if there be any being on this earth whose serrows should touch the pity of man, as it does that of Heaven, it is much an outcast -Under the wanton walk and meretricious glare, the kind heart of woman is often found. And there are many and many, at this moment, who would bathe with their tears and wipe with their hair the feet of a deliverer, as Magdalen did in the inspired narrative Let us turn to another pic-In a house within a pleasant drive of London, whose combination of suburban beauty with city grandeur, and whose chaste adornments of art and graceful luxury of decoration, gave to it the air almost offairy palace, sits a woman of middle age, but round the parting summer of whose beauty somewhat of lingering spring has still de layed. This woman had, when young wed ded a husband at the altar with sworn vow She abandoned hun for a lover She sick ened again of him, and soured up to ano ther. She betrayed too, his foolish, but loving and trusting heart, which forced him into marrying her, and kept as paramour a gay gallant and gorgeous young Frenchman, Count D'Orsay. To this man she conceived the foul design of marrying her husband's child; her own step daughter, in order thus to centre in the object of her guilty passion her dull dotard of a hus-band's wealth. The plot succeeded. After the marriage she still continued the intimacy. When the fit c me, her daughter was driven from the doors; and Lady Blessington and Count D'Orsay maintained their connection, and set baine at defiance to the last. The wretched outcast of the street, poor and seduced, is called a prostiquie. The brilliant mistress of Gore House affluent and the seducer, is called a charming person.' Men of the highest rank and most bonore I names in England, were not ashamed, nay, were proud to worship this polluted goddess, and to lay garlands at her shrine. We own we were startled to find among the list of such a woman's schoicest communicants and most favored guests, such names as those of the decorous Peel and the refined Lord John Russell. Yet this woman had not the palliation of seduction, of desertion, or of want like the rustic outcast. She was rich, and had a fond husband and a beauteous home. Yes, she did a deed, and that to her own husband's child, so deep and damnably infamous, that not all the charms of sparking conversation and elegant case can wipe it out from the book of the recording angel. In this fell purpose she had for her accomplice, her paramour, Count D'Orsay, an accomplished dilettante, who dressed, rode, walked, talked, wrote, chiseled, played and who carried under these superficial accomplishments as this one act to his victimized wife clearly shewed, a heart as cold and black as was ever harbored by a willian. Such was the woman and such the man round, whose 'graceful board' land loved to gather. Yet, in hurrying home from such a feast, there was not one of these well-mannered men and fastidious women who would not have passed the outcast with a shudder.

NOT DEAD.

THE "LIVE CIRALIE" AGAIN! A New Era About to Dawn Upon North (arolina.

At the constant and carnest solicitation of nearly every body, but especially the old acquaintanees of "ye Animal," we have been induced to promise, if protender" enough can be secured, to trot that beast out again to the gaze of all mankind, and the universal admiration of wordankind, during the first week in January, 1856.

"The Live Giraffe," while it was a neutral paper while it grazed in its own green pastorage, played with the girls and joked with the boys, was the most popular sheet animale or inanimate. that ever i-sued from a Southern press; and had been content to have lived in its own native sphere it would now have been the Brother Jonathan" of the South. Such a result can but be exident to any thinking man; it was indeed on the high road to fame and a most enviable distinction. But becoming fat, in an unlucky moment like the man who had grown "rich enough to ride an ass," and had therefore gotten above his fellows, the "Animal" leaped the bars of its accustomed field and the next thing we heard of him, he. like a man turned politician from preacher, was pining for the good things of life and no doubt, like the silty tamb of old that ended the sight of the shepard, and got into the thick woods which was found to be infeated with welves, he wished himself tack in his old range But the bars had been put another all higher and he couldn't get back; besides he and gown o leme that he could not jump It is said that bought wisdom is the best in the world if it dont cost ton much. A mighty rne saying; one in which there is more of truth can poetry or romance, and in view of this old saving and the Annimal's experience his old friends need have little fear that he will at any ime hereafter cut the same caper again. He'd cick any man that would intimate such a thing The Live Giraffe will then be neutral. It will estevented to fun. to the news and literature. It will be made the vehicle of publishing many hought to the world fonny, grave and instrucive that would have wa ted itself on the air "as number tos sido" but for its columns; it will cuk every opportunity to turn grave and uninter ing matters into pleasant and agreeable incients; upset all ill-natured humanity it meets th and mould it anew; expose all tascality herever found whether in Church or Statetiat's promising a great deal) or in the social ircle, and keep a strict watch on the press, literary, religious and political and see that each The cilizens of Raleigh know well enough the due of such a sheet and would not do without t another year for half a million. Whe since the exit of the Animal from their borders, they have and more but lines than was ever heard of before. More Trusts have been made more liens been given upon property, more assignments made, more quarreling and fighting, more drinking of hippor more meanness generally, and more ill inck than ever was known at any period since the great plague in Egypt. Now this is as plain as daylight and the only remedy for such evils is to trot out the Anima Now, this is the proposition I shall make to

von. I want an assurance of your willingness to patronize the Animal, and to get that assurance l shall give you fall opportunity to correspond with me and to send in all the names that can be se-If 500 names c n be secured we shall have n fears o the success of the Animal. He will such grow tat when he begins to take exercise and, hen he can plead his own case, if not with eloquent words at least with an occasional kick at he boys.

It has been intimated to me that the comon I sustained to the "Carolina Pennant" would njure the Animal since the Pennant" had sud lenly expired and left many of its subscribers it the suds I have to say here, and I hope it will satisfy every body that I had no interest in the Pennant." I wrote mest of its Editorials for which I should have received something according to agreement but I did not. I have tried this co business and it neither pays nor suits my ge-nins. I want a broad hemisphere, a wide latitude, and notody to divide with me in the spoils.

Then, friends, we now underst and each other.
I want you to send me your names between now end the first of January; if enough respond, the

Devoted to News, Internal Improvement, Educa-tion, Agriculture, Manufacture & Com-WE know that the interests of the People of our State demand such a poper, and believing that one free from political strifes and quarrels of the day, devoted to such topics, will be the kind they desire, we confidently enter upon this enterprise with the assurance of meriting and meeting their approbation and support. Our object is to make the Times the mirror of the State, in which all can see their true interests held up and encour-

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS. To this and INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.—To this subject we expect to devote as much space as a full statement of the various operations will require for as our works of improvement advance, as do all the other interests of the State.

EDUCATION.—It is a source of regret to all interested in the Educational interests of on State, (and who is not?) that our papers are so much devoted to party politics. &c., that this great cause has been too much neglected; we propose, therefore, to devote to this subject, a portion of our space. Permit us, however, to making you that the first number of the Times will make its appearance about the time the cars reach this place from the East.
