

MISCELLANY.

THE COLPORTEUR AND MAN WITH A JUG.

About six years ago a colporteur of the American Tract Society was travelling on horseback through one of the most mountainous portions of Cherokee, Georgia, laden with books for distribution and sale.

When passing through a narrow gorge between two hills, where there was scarcely room for more than one person to pass, he met a man with a jug.

"Good morning, sir, can I sell you a book?" "No, sir; I have no money," was the reply.

"Where are you going, my friend, with your jug?" "To the still-house, sir."

"Suppose you take the money with which you propose to buy the whisky, and buy a good book, and go home without the whisky, and read the book, and I promise it will be far better for you."

"But, sir, I have no money—I am to get the whisky on credit."

"Well, my friend, I will make another proposition—I will buy your jug and give you a book for it. You can then go home and read your book, and do without the liquor. What do you say to that?"

"The man with the jug hesitated awhile, and then replied, 'I will let you have the jug.'"

The colporteur took the jug and gave him a copy of the Temperance Manual, and hanging his new purchase on his arm, journeyed on till night, when he gave the jug to the lady of the house at which he spent the night.

He visited several families before night, however, carrying the jug, which was a great matter of astonishment and wonder to all who saw him, and the question was frequently asked, "What are you doing with that jug?"

The colporteur heard nothing more of the man from whom he bought the jug until this year, during the sitting of the Superior Court, in the county of C—, six years having elapsed. Being at Court, still engaged in colporting for the Tract Society, he was accosted by a gentleman with the inquiry,

"Do you remember trading for a jug, several years ago, in the hills about here?" "I do, sir," replied the colporteur.

"Yonder," said the gentleman, pointing to a sober looking man, "is the man from whom you bought it."

"He was at the time you met him a drunkard—a pest to society. Now he is a sober man, and has been ever since the day you took the jug away from him. He is now an orderly and consistent member of the church, and enjoys religion. He is industrious and supports his family well; whereas, while he owned the jug, he did little else than make his visits to the still-house, and fill and empty his jug."

The colporteur, feeling some interest, inquired of the man how the change was so suddenly wrought on him. "Was it the tract?" "No," said he, "it was your determination, and the interest you seemed to manifest in my welfare; and besides this, you took my jug, and that set me thinking; then I went home and read the tract, and determined, by the help of God, I would never drink another drop, and I have been enabled to keep that promise."

This is a plain, unvarnished tale, and shows how much may be done by strong personal efforts. "Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days."

SHOCKING ACCIDENT.

The Luzerne Union states that a boy named Hoffman was killed at Wilkesbarre last week by the accidental discharge of a gun.

The boy was ordered to take a gun into the cabin of a boat on which he was employed. The gun, it appears, was cocked, and the boy in going into the cabin put the muzzle to his mouth, when, the trigger striking the steps, the whole load was shot into his mouth and head.

FROST. The Charlottesville Jeffersonian says that there was a heavy frost in that place on Tuesday night, week, and presumes it was general in all the vicinity.

MORALITY OF DIVORCES. Speaking one day of the early Romans, Mr. Webster said that he could almost believe everything related by historians of their extraordinary virtues, public and domestic, when he dwelt upon the fact that, though their laws authorized divorce, yet, for the first five hundred years, no individual ever availed himself of such a license!
