COURTING A WIDOW.

Coming to town one day, I met a friend whom I had not seen for a year. Jones is an eccentric old bachelor, agreeable enough if you happen to please him ; but churlish to those he dont like.

"Well, Jones,' said I. 'what have you been doing with yourself this summer ?' "Bu would not guess in a year,' (Jones was communicative that day.) I have turned out again, and have actually been hunting a wife ! 'Good ! I speak to be first groomsman -you know you promised me in our col. lege days."

Not so fast my friend; I did not say I was going to be married; and, unless somebody does the courting for me, I don't know that I shall ever be a benedict. Confound the women I I thought I had found an exception, this time ; but they are all alike. I had tempted maidens to matrimony before, but never a widow till now. It may relieve me to tell you the story, if you can have the patience to listen to it."

"I'll hear it with the greatest pleasure " (So here is Jones courtship-not Major Jones however.)

"You must know," said Jones, 'I have always been fond of lending a hand and a tongue to match-making, though I never did any good at it.

'One day a friend said to me, Come, go to town with me; I am going to ask a young lady marry me, and I want your useful assistance, as my intended has a sister who plays propriety, and must be kep! off. Of course I went.

"Now the girls were both rich-it is well known we court none but rich girls.

"It was a hot summer alternoon when we reached the best hotel in town, and the first man we met was Poco Mas. Poco was gay; he acknowledged he h s been taking a smile ; and the first thing he did was to invite us up to his room to take bramly and ice wate , which no southerner ever refuses.

"While inbibing. Poco had the inquisitiveness to ask us what we had come to town for.

The innocent and artlessn as of the wonan charmed me more and more : she knew no more of the world-I foolishly thought-than a girl just out of a convent -and I could hardly imagine a widow so insophisticated, as the seemed.

Innocence is ever simple and credulous, ed at this avowal, which his modesty at hought I; conscious of no designs itself. I suspects none in others; it wears no proecting shield, bears no weapons of defence but every door and portal avenue of the

ONE OF THE WONDERS OF THE WORLD. There was a good deal said, save the Boston Post, about the "Victoria Bridge" at the late Canada cetebration, and a story is affort that her nice hule Majesty will come over the sens to celebrate its completion. This structure acr as the St Law rence, a short way above Montreal, the Canada papers tell us, will be one of the great wonders of the world. It was commenced in July, 1854, and is under contract to be completed in 1860. The total estimated cost was originally about $7,-000.000; but recently the plans have been amended so as to reduce it to a little over $6,000,000 The extreme length of the bridge, including the abutment at each side, will be 7,000 feet, or rather more than a mile and a quarter. "The next morning, as I was driving with Dr. Doubloyon, in his buggy, I said to him:

"Do ; ou know a widow Blanc, now in town ?'

"Yes,' he answered with animation, 'and she is young, pretty and rich !'

"Deuce take it, there aint a rich mar riageable woman in the United States that you do not find out ! How did you hear of her?

"Never mind ! Will you introduce me to her ?'

"This very evening, at 8 o'clock, if you wish.'

" 'Ceel convenu.' I had a friend who was going to address her, and I wanted to see her, more to tease him, than for any serious intentions on my part ; though I did not let the Dr. know it.

"At the appointed time we found the widow in question | she was a charming lady, smiled like an angel, sung like a sy ren, danced like a fairy, talked like the mormor of a running rill, and had a fault less form. As we went home, the Doctor tapped me on the shoulder to arouse me from my revery, and said :

" I can tell you something !"

"What is it ?'

"You are in love with that woman." 1 might have found it put, in a few days ;but the remark put me thinking of it at the n oment.

"The next morning as I was walking down the street, I thought I passed her, with another lady, and I stepped into a book store, till they should go by, that I might see. She came into the store and 1 conversed with her a few minutes. I left. more charmed than ever.
