THE TEN DOLLAR PIANO.

"A STORY THAT WAS TOLD ME."

BY ALMA MATER.

I saw an old woman tottering along one cold day. The sight of my eyes affected my heart, and, as is usually the I said to myself, I will see what this tin before case, my feelings ran out at the pen's point, thus:

O! winter wind, blow not too bleak On yonder trembling one; Her limbs are old, and chill, and weak, Soft greet her, winter sun.

For she has seen no smile to-day, No fire is in her cot; So, winter wind, go seck the gay Pass by and harm her not.

O! winter wind, toss not away Those locks of faded hair, They shone once o'er a sweet blue eye When she was young and fair.

They glittered there like golden wings, Gems held their bands apart; Now frost lies on the faded rings,

And frost within her heart. As I laid my pen down a beautiful child of seven summers, with the golher bright curls; childhood's fresh lustre in her dark eyes, and June's reddest roses on her dimpled cheeks-"O!" she cried, tossing the stray curls from her brow, "we've got the splendidest new piano over home, and mother wants you to come and try it. She says you shall play on it first." Now I am a child with children; my heart bounds, my pulses leap in unison with their sportive natures, when they are by .dying wine, still may the dear Lord grant Verily, truth is stranger than fiction. to me the trusting tenderness of childhood; still may the feet of infancy patter around my knee, and its red lips
