MISCELLANY. Under a plea of indisposition Reginald Darcy retired at an early hour, and when alone in the quiet of his chamber, he breathed his evening orison, the name of Marian Leslie trembled on his lips.

"How is Mrs. Grant," asked Mrs. Warner of her friend Sarah Porter, a few days after the above occurrences.

"Do lay aside that rusty book, Marian; it is four o'clock and time you were dressing for the ball. I will ring for Bridget."

"No, no, Francella, I am not going to the ball to-night. I promised Mrs. Grant I would call and see her this evening; her little girl has just been here and tells me she is worse and wishes to see me, so don't tease me, sister dear, to go with you."

"Why, Marian Leslie, you dissembling little elf, you always manage to disappoint me when I most depend upon you; if cousin Ellen was here I would not ask you to go, but as she is not your company is indispensable. Not go why, Marian; the idea is absurd and ridiculous; the Mitchells and Murrays, and Howitts, and Halls, and in fact all the elite are to be there, and I forgot to tell, Mrs. Newton has been here, and she says that Reginald Darcy has returned, and he of course will be there in flying colors. Miss Newton declares that he has improved amazingly, and she considers him admirable, and you know her taste is exquisite. Now, Marian, go and set your cap for him; you know he was half in love with you before he went South and he would be quite if he could see you now."

"Hush, hush, sister, say no more; I cannot go with you to-night; I have a nobler mission to perform."

"Ah me, I wish you were not so entirely at variance with every one else; 'tis perfect nonsense, Marian, for you to be running after dirty beggar children and listening to whining fidgety old women. Pray, who can I tell people you are to go to-night? Ah, making gruel for mother Grant, and singing lullabies to her dirty rag muffins? A pleasurable occupation, really, but what makes you so pale, are you sick?"

"No--yes I am sick of this fashionable routine of dressing, dancing and visiting; indeed, Francella, this artificial state of society is insipid and repugnant to me, setting aside the consideration of a future state, this system might be tolerated, if in the drawing-room, the theatre, the ball, were the sum total of human life; but it is ill calculated to direct our thoughts in that channel which should prepare us for our home eternal. Think of these things, dear sister, and turn your life to a better account. Fortune has favored us, we have revelled in luxury, the gifted and noble have bowed at our feet and paid us homage, and why. Are we more beautiful, more intellectual, more worthy than thousands of others who pine in obscurity because wealth has not given them position?--Have we no aim in life, no conscience, no reason, no Bible? Shall we, because our pathway is strewn with gold and roses, neglect and trample upon the widow, the orphan, the homeless wanderer? Have they not immortal souls like you and I? do they not pray to the same God, look forward to the same eternity? 'Tis wrong, all wrong this course that we have taken, Francella, and there is need of reform."

"I am highly edified with your discourse, Marian; pray, from whom do you inherit your gift of oratory? I should not be surprised if you should take to the pulpit yet. But can talk no longer; hope you will have a good time with Hanny G. and her brat, and if you get time prepare a sermon to deliver to-morrow evening, I shall be at leisure then."

So saying Francella Leslie hastened to the parlor to await her chaperon, Frank Simmond. Very beautiful she looked as she stood before the tall mirror twining her long jetty tresses over her taper fingers. Very lightly she tripped through the hall and down the lengthy stairway, leaning on the arm of her admirer, and when they were unencumbered in the cosy equipage which was to convey them to the scene of revelry, Marian donned her hat and cloak, took her Bible and a package of medicine and proceeded on her mission to the sick.

Marian and Francella Leslie were daughters of a millionaire in Providence, and young, accomplished and beautiful, they were sought after and admired. Marian the eldest was no less lovely in person than her sister, and perhaps she was once as volatile, but at the time we introduce her to the reader the contrast was apparent.

"The night passed like a blissful dream to Francella; she danced, she laughed, she jilted, and by many she was termed the belle of the evening."

"Where is Marian Leslie?" asked Reginald Darcy, of a consequential lady, as the scene of hilarity was at its height.

"Oh, she is engaged in running after beggars, I believe. I am sure her sister is ashamed of her."

Darcy made no reply to this uncouth remark, but turned from her with an air of contempt, and the remainder of the evening he wandered about the room, abstracted and thoughtful.

"I will call on Marian to-morrow," he whispered half audibly; "I always thought there was something remarkable about that girl, she is not the divelling thing her sister is."

Under a plea of indisposition Reginald Darcy retired at an early hour, and when alone in the quiet of his chamber, he breathed his evening orison, the name of Marian Leslie trembled on his lips--for he felt impelled a blessing.

"How is Mrs. Grant," asked Mrs. Warner of her friend Sarah Porter, a few days after the above occurrences.

"Do not know how she is to-day; yesterday lady Marian told me that she had but little hoped her recovery. Lady Marian," she continued, "found her in a destitute condition, her husband in a state of intoxication, and her children very ragged; but she has now every comfort she can desire. What an angel Miss Leslie is; when she dies there will be one more saint in heaven."

"What self-denial she exercises!" struck in Mrs. Warner. "I understand she denied herself the pleasure of going to the great military ball, in order to visit poor Mrs. Grant."

"You are wrong, Mrs. Warner, to suppose that Miss Leslie considered it in that light; she enjoyed herself much more in the chamber of affliction than she would amid that scene of mirth."

"But, have you heard anything with regard to Reginald Darcy?" enquired Mrs. Warner, and she withdrew her spectacles from her eyes and rubbed them eagerly on the corner of her apron as she while wishing to convert eyes into ears. "I heard," she continued, "on replacing her glasses and without waiting for a reply, 'that he was completely in love with Miss Leslie.'"

"That he is, I think there can be no doubt, Mrs. Warner, but I have not the least reason to suppose that his affections will be reciprocated."

"Pshaw, there is not a lady in this city who would not give him favor."

"You misinterpret my meaning, Mrs. Warner. We all know he is talented, handsome and aristocratic, but Miss Leslie looks beyond personal adornment, it is the principles, the heart, the mind, the pathos."

"La, I know it, Sarah, but she will never find any one who is perfect."

"One evening some six months after, Reginald Darcy left the Leslie manor with a light heart. 'I am happy now,' he said, 'Marian is an angel, I only wish I were worthier of her.'"

Shortly after, the walls of Leslie mansion echoed back the sound of happy voices.

"Lady Marian is a beautiful bride. She has made me very happy," said Mrs. Grant, and the poor woman's face lighted up with gratitude.

"I am surprised that lady Marian should permit those poor, detestable looking creatures to be at her wedding," exclaimed Miss Gossip, and the finger of scorn was pointed at the low Mrs. Grant, who sat meekly in one corner of the room, arrayed in her pea green calico, with her children by her side.

"I am very glad she is well enough to be present," replied her friend, "Miss Leslie has saved her from an untimely grave, clothed and fed her children, and exerted a blessed influence over her besotted husband; then why, I ask, has she not a right to be here and witness the happiness of her protectress?"

"Horror, inadequate, don't speak to me again until you can talk more reasonably," and Miss Gossip left her friend with an indignant toss of the head.

Reginald Darcy never regretted his choice. In after years, when fashion and all its train attendant had lost its charms for him, lady Marian's virtues and piety exerted an influence almost divine over his existence. When earthly cares oppressed and laid with leaden weight upon his heart, then, he found consolation in the society of one who consulted God rather than man; one who bowed not at the shrine of Tammon.

TRIEMSEAN NO. 1. Is a remedy for Relaxation, Spermatorrhoea, and all the diseases consequent arising from early abuse, indolence, excess, or too long and late in hot climates. It has restored bodily strength and vigor to thousands, and is now in the enjoyment of health and the functions of manhood; and whatever may be the cause or diet, it is a sure remedy for marriage, they are effectually subdued.

TRIEMSEAN NO. 2. Completely and entirely eradicates all forms of Gonorrhoea, its mild and aggravated forms, Gleet, Stricture, Irritation of the Bladder, Non-retention of Urine, Pains of the Loins and Kidneys, and all the diseases for which the medicine and Cubeba have so long been thought an antidote.

TRIEMSEAN NO. 3. Is the great Constitutional remedy for Syphilis and Secondary Symptoms. It also constitutes a certain cure for Scoury, Scrofula, and all Cutaneous eruptions, and is especially adapted to all impurities from the vitæ, such as a tetter, to eradicate the virus of disease, and expel it from the system, and protect the medium of the pores of the skin and urine.

It is a never failing remedy for that class of disorders which English Physicians treat with Mercury, to wit, the inevitable destruction of the constitution, and which all the Sarsaparilla in the world cannot remove.

TRIEMSEAN NO. 4. 1, 2, and 3, are prepared in the form of a lozenge, devoid of taste, smell, and can be carried in the waistcoat pocket. Sold in tin cases and divided in separate doses, and are sold by Valpey, Lullman, Roux, Ricord, &c., &c. Prices $2 each, or four cases in one for $9, which includes the medicine and Cubeba, there is a saving of 50 cents.

None are genuine unless the Engravings of the Seal of the Patent Office of England, the Seal of the Ecole de Pharmacie de Paris, and the Imperial College of Vienna, are affixed upon each wrapper, and are each case, imitations are liable to the same penalties as the original.

Special arrangements enable Dr. E. Barrow to forward immediately, on receiving a remittance, 25 or 50 large sized cases of Goldbeater's Membrane, or any part of the world, securely packed and properly addressed, thus insuring genuine and prompt preparation and protecting the public from spurious and pernicious imitations.

Attendance and Consultation from 11 A. M. till 4 P. M. at 411 St. P. M. in the evening, 157 Prince Street, a few blocks west of Broadway, New York, April 25, 1857. 18-1y.

GENIN'S OBERON HAT. A New summer style for young men. Genin has the pleasure of calling the attention of young men to an entire new fabric, intended especially for their use, and which combines the flexibility of the soft hat, with all the beauties and advantages of the straw hat. The material is felt, the finest texture, the color a dark fawn or amber; it is made moderately thick and the brain which is wide enough to hide the face, without being too wide to be elegant, has a leaf like turn on either side, which is lighter than straw hat, and the hat gives to the touch as readily as the soft hat, is so elastic that it springs back to its true shape as soon as the pressure is removed. A shower that soaks the straw hat does no damage to the Oberon, and in point of durability, will compare favorably with any summer style ever introduced in this country.

The Oberon may be termed the connecting link between the soft and silk hat combining the merits of both, without the defects, being sufficiently elastic for dress purposes. For sale at the Hat and Cap Emporium 34 Market st.

BALTIMORE LOCK HOSPITAL. DR. JOHNSTON. THE founder of this celebrated institution, offers the most certain, speedy and efficient remedy in the world for SECRET DISEASES.

Gleets, Strictures, Seminal Weakness, Pains in the Loins, Constitutional Debility, Impotency, Weakness of the Back and Limbs, Affections of the Kidneys, Palpitation of the Heart, Dyspepsia, Nervous Irritability, Disease of the Head, Throat, Nose or Skin; those serious and melancholy disorders arising from venereal contagion, which destroy both body and mind. Those cases and solitary practices more fatal to their victims than any other, and which have rendered the name of Ullyess, blighting their most brilliant hopes or anticipations, rendering marriage, &c., impossible.

Especially, when he becomes the victim of Syphilis, that dreadful and destructive habit which annually sweeps to an untimely grave thousands of young men of the most exalted talents and brilliant intellect, who might otherwise have entrusted legislative Senates with the thunders of eloquence, or who, to stately the living lyre, may call with full confidence.

MARRIAGE. Married persons of Young Men, contemplating marriage, being warned of the fatal consequences of Constitutional Debility, Deficiencies, &c., should immediately consult Dr. J., and be restored to perfect health.

Who places himself under the care of Dr. Johnston may religiously confide in his honor as a gentleman, and confidently rely upon his skill as a physician.

Dr. Johnston is the only regularly Educated Physician, who has had the honor of being elected a Member of the Royal College of Physicians, London, and of the Royal Society of Medicine, London, and of the Royal Society of Edinburgh, London, and of the Royal Society of Berlin, Prussia, &c., and a more extensive practice than any other physician in the world. His many wonderful cures and most important Surgical Operations, is a sufficient guarantee to the afflicted.

Those who wish to be speedily and effectually relieved, should apply to him, and be restored to perfect health, and apply to him.

A CURE WARRANTED OR NO CHARGE. Dr. Johnston, of Baltimore, Md., has a large and successful practice in the treatment of all the diseases of the human system, and is particularly distinguished by the reputation of Dr. Johnston, Surgeon, Baltimore, Md.
