MISCELLANY. STAVOREN. A LEGEND OF THE ZUYDER ZEE.

Stavoren occupied the first rank among the commercial cities of Holland. The ships of her merchants traversed every sea, and brought to her safe harbor the choicest productions of every clime.

A trade so extensive raised the prosperity of the city to an unprecedented height. True, there were here, as everywhere, many poor persons, among the inhabitants, yet the number of the rich greatly preponderated. Luxury and splendor, the usual accompaniments of great riches increased rapidly from the foolish pride with which each citizen strove to excel his neighbor in pomp and in magnificence and costly entertainments.

Now, two, he understood the meaning of the mysterious words spoken by the stranger at the feast, and his resolution was soon made. He steered to a haven of the Eastern seas, and there took a full lading of the finest wheat, with which he sailed back to Stavoren. As soon as he arrived he went to Richberta, who did not expect him so soon, and informed her that he now knew what was the best and most-precious of all good things; he had found it and brought it in abundance. He then related to the astonished lady how he made the discovery, and that the mysterious guest could only have meant bread, and that he therefore believed he had properly executed his commission.

But Richberta was not of the same opinion. She cast an angry glance at the astonished sailor, and with difficulty restraining an outburst of rage, asked him from which side the ship the cargo was taken on board. He answered, from the right side. "Now, then," cried she, with a whole glare, "I command that the whole cargo be immediately thrown over from the left side into the sea."

In vain were all remonstrances against the rash command. In vain the admiral sought to move the heart of Richberta, by imploring her not to give up to destruction the rich blessing of God, but at least to alleviate with the wants of the poor. In vain he sent her crowds of the needy, to soften her resolution. It was all of no avail, and she had the whole cargo thrown into the water under her own eyes, amid the groans and imprecations of the multitude.

The bottom received the cargo, and the grain became a crop of destruction. Sprouting and shooting up in the mud, and continually covered with new earth, appeared a forest of stalks, without ears of grain, rising higher and higher in an unnatural growth, till it reached the surface; and as it presented an obstacle to the moving particles of mud, there was formed before the harbor of Stavoren an immense bar, which mortal power could not break through.

The numerous ships of the city, and among them those of Richberta, could no longer find an entrance to the port, and were sacrificed to the fury of the waves. Trade and health rapidly declined, and frequent reverses brought the proud woman, from her pinnacle of splendor and prosperity to such a degree of want and misery that she was even forced to beg for bread.

But the sea, now that its accustomed inlet was barred, beat with renewed violence against the shore, and during the storm of a dark tempestuous night, broke through the dike, overflowed the city, and soon buried it with its foundations in the deep. Where once Stavoren stood, the Zuyder Zee now rolls its gloomy waves. Even to this day, when clear water permits a sight of the depths below, the mariner looks down, with horror, upon the proud towers and gates, the streets and lofty palaces, proofs of the sunken and once splendid city.

praise her wealth, and the splendor of her banquet, and to institute such comparisons as would only furnish fresh food for her pride. But he remained silent upon that subject until at length, after being questioned by the hostess herself, he admitted that he had found such magnificence and lavishness only among kings but concluded by saying that it seemed on that account the more strange to him to find wanting here the best and noblest thing the earth produced.

In vain they importuned the stranger to explain his meaning; he remained silent, and when the questions became too pressing, departed and was not seen again.

The pride and curiosity of Richberta were excited, and from that time allowed her no rest. She possessed everything costly which the tongue could name, or the earth and sea produce, or conceal in their depths; could she still lack the best of all? She questioned sages and soothsayers, consulted magicians and interpreters of dreams; but none could mention a thing she had not already long possessed.

Then in her restless longing for the unknown and inestimable treasure, she ordered ships to be fitted out which should explore all seas and lands, and not return until it should be discovered. Her admiral, entrusted with this difficult commission, put to sea, undetermined whether to direct his course.

A part of his ships he sent to the most distant seas of the East and West, while he committed his own to the guidance of the winds. No, it so happened that the water entered the vessel through a leak; and spoiled part of their provisions; and although there was no lack of meat, wine and other articles of luxury, yet the soon severely felt the loss of their bread and meal, which had become unpalatable.

In this strait, the commander was not long in discovering what should be considered the best and most precious gift to man; not the viands and spices of India—not pearls from the bottom of the sea—not gold from the deepest mines of the mountains—but the simple, universal gift of nature indispensable, inestimable, nourishing and quickening bread.

Now, two, he understood the meaning of the mysterious words spoken by the stranger at the feast, and his resolution was soon made. He steered to a haven of the Eastern seas, and there took a full lading of the finest wheat, with which he sailed back to Stavoren. THE WESTERN VISITERS.

WASHINGTON, July 22, 1857.—About 9 o'clock yesterday morning a special train of cars from Baltimore brought to our city the expected Trans-Montane Visitors to the number of between two and three hundred. They were escorted hither by the committees of the Councils and citizens dispatched on Monday to Baltimore for the purpose.

On leaving the cars the visitors were met by the Mayor of Washington, at the head of numerous members of both Boards of the City Councils and a large body of our fellow-citizens. After being introduced the Mayor of Washington addressed the strangers substantially as follows:

"Gentlemen visitors from the Western cities, in behalf of the Corporation and citizens of the National Metropolis I welcome you to our city. I trust you will find it in plan and dimensions such as to constitute it in your opinion not unworthy to be the capital of so great a country. It is yours, and not ours; it is for us to keep it for you and the whole people of the United States; we claim it not for our own, but as the representatives of the people of the Union—Hoping you may find in the many objects of interest it contains matter for individual pleasure and patriotic gratification, I again welcome you, and hope that when you return home you will think and feel of us in such a way as will induce you to visit us again."

This welcome was responded to by Mr. Adams of Chillicothe, who, in behalf of those from his city and vicinity, returned his hearty thanks for the kind welcome thus extended. The Mayor of Washington was right, he said, in calling the city of Washington their own. It was such; they all felt it, and acknowledged the deep interest they have in its welfare. You have here, said Mr. Adams, many objects of interest. Here is the national Capitol; here are the national Executive official buildings; here you have the Smithsonian Institute, and objects so numerous as to be difficult to name. We accept your hospitality with lively satisfaction, and thank you heartily.

Mr. Alderman Kercheval, of Cincinnati, having been asked to respond for the citizens present from Cincinnati and St. Louis, spoke of the delight experienced by the party when it was heard in Baltimore of the handsome invitation extended to them from Washington, and of the manner in which their Washington friends had interposed for their pleasure. He thanked the Mayor of Washington and its citizens, and accepted it in the same cordial spirit in which it had been proffered.

The party then took place in the numerous stages awaiting them, and proceeded to the President's House, where, after parading through the mansion and grounds, they were joined by the President of the United States, who, in the simplest and most cordial manner, received the numerous strangers presented to him by the Mayor, charming all by his affability and unadvised friendliness of speech and manner.—The party then visited the Patent Office, the Capitol, and the Smithsonian Institution, when two o'clock having arrived they all found themselves on board the steamer George Washington, on the way to Mount Vernon, where repose the remains of him who in life, in death, and in posterity's memory still stands "first in the hearts of his countrymen." The trip was pleasant and a southern breeze made it delightful.

Arrived at the sacred spot, the ladies and gentlemen of the party first showed how their affections gratified by repairing direct to "the tomb," and then, scarcely able to slake the intensity of their interest by actual vision, they mused in silent contemplation. Passing thence, with true human sympathy in thought of the living hours of "him first, him last," in true American devotion they instructed their minds by moving through the rooms, halls, and passages, instinct with the presence and idea of Washington, fixing every particular with special emphasis upon each memory.

The way back was not less delightful than that down, for the wind had changed to the west, and thus a fresh breeze was still in the face. Once more landing in the streets of the city of Washington, some delay was experienced; but at about half-past seven o'clock the party were called to the feast prepared for them at Carver's Saloon, the ladies preceding, and being first seated. When the keenness of appetite from a day's fasting had been blunted, the Mayor of Washington arose, and in eloquent terms, alluded to the wonderful change in the circumstances of travelling that had happened twenty-five years! It was at that time a day's journey to Baltimore and a day's journey back, and a journey to New York was ground enough for a man's making his will. In view of this wonderful progress, he gave as a toast "Our Country," which was responded to in the most patriotic manner. Then were drunk in succession the Memory of the Father of his Country; the health of President Buchanan, from whom a most acceptable letter was read, and which was greeted by three hearty cheers; a letter from Gen. Cass, apologizing for his absence; similar letters from Mr. Secretary Floyd and Attorney General Black, when "the Cabinet" was toasted and most cordially drank. Mr. Cobb, Secretary of the Treasury, being present, responded in happy and patriotic terms, bringing down the house. To a toast in honor of the Empire State of the West, the State of Ohio, Mr. Brown, of Cincinnati, responded, after which, in answer to a sentiment complimentary to St. Louis, Mr. Williams, of that city, replied in a most felicitous manner.—Other toasts were given and drank in honor of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, the City of Washington, &c., &c., when at a little past nine o'clock the party separated so as to allow the excursionists an opportunity to be on board the returning special train for Baltimore, to start hence at 10 o'clock.

Every thing went off pleasantly, and every body seemed pleased with every body else. We trust all arrived safe at their respective places of destination.

BALTIMORE LOCK HOSPITAL.

DR. JOHNSTON'S. THE founder of this celebrated institution of the most efficient and successful remedy in the world for SECRET DISEASES. Gleet, Stricture, Seminal Weakness, Pain in the Loins, Constitutional Debility, Impotency, Weakness of the Back and Limbs, Affections of the Kidneys, Palpitation of the Heart, Dyspepsia, Nervous Irritability, Diseases of the Bladder, Urinary Noise or Skin; those serious and melancholy affections deriving from the destructive habits of Youth, which destroy both body and mind. These secret and solitary practices more fatal to their victims than the song of the Sirens to the mariners of Ulysses, blighting their minds, and robbing them of all the pleasures of a virtuous life, are, if not remedied, incurable. Especially, who have become the victims of Solitary Vice, that dreadful and destructive habit which usually sweeps to an untimely grave thousands of young men of the most exalted talents and brilliant genius, who, by indulging in these habits, have entranced their minds, and have become the victims of a fatal disease, which, if not remedied, is incurable. Those who wish to be speedily and effectually cured, should send the numerous trifling impostors, who only seek to injure the health, and ruin the fortunes of those who are afflicted with these secret diseases, a CURK WARRANTED OR NO CHARGE. No Mercury or Nauseous Drugs Used! OFFICE, No. 7, SOUTH FREDERICK ST. Boston, three stories up, over the door of the corner. Fail not to observe his name and number, for ignorant trifling impostors, who have the courage of the reputation of Dr. Johnston, have near.
