MISCELLANY.

A TIPSY PARSON. In a village not a hundred miles from Philadelphia, resided the Rev. Mr. Man-lius, who had the pastoral charge of a very stable congregation, and Was highly esteemed by them; but there was one thing in which he did not give general satisfacion, and in consequence of which many excellent members of his church felt seriously scandulized. He would neither join a temperance society, nor omit his glass of wine when he felt inclined to take it. It to only fair to say, however, that such spirtuous indulgences were not of frequent occurrence. It was more the principle of the thing, as he said, that he stood upon, than a temperance pledge.

'I would at more sign a pledge not to trink brandy, than I would sign a pledge not to steal, was the position in which he wished to be free to choose good from evil, and to act right because it is wrong to do otherwise. I do not find fault with others there, at the special request of one of the f r signing a pledge, nor for abstaining from wine. If they think it right, it is right for them But as for myself, I would cut off my right hand before I would bind mysel! by mire external restraint. My bonds are internal principles. I ain temperate because intemperance is a sin. For men who have abused their fredom, and so far lost all rational control over themselves, that they cannot resist the insane spirit of intemperance, the pledge is all important .- r Sign it, I say, in the name of heaven; but | COST FOR CASH. do not sign it because this, that or the other temperate man has signed it, but because you feel it your only hope. Do it ! for yourself, and do it if you are the only man in the world who acts thus. To sign , because an ther man whom you think more respectable has signed, will give you little or no strength. You must do it for yourself, and because it is right." The parson was pretty ready with the ongue and rarely came off second best

'His love for wine and brandy is : the bottom of all his hostility to the temperance caus, was boldly said of him by i dividuals in and out of his church. But ce e cially were the members of other church s severe upon him.

'He'll turn out a drunkard,' said one. 'I shouldn't be surprised to see him stag-gering in the streets before two years, said while others said : "Isn't it scandalous ?"

'He's a 'isgrace to his profession.'
'He pretends to have religion.'

'A minister, indeed.'

And so the changes rang.

All this time Mr. Manlius firmly maintained his ground, taking his glass of wine whenever it suited him. At last, after the
