GREETINGS

from
WESLEY W. (GUS) HARDISON
WALTER H. PARAMORE

The beautiful story of the Three Wise Men who sought the Star, almost two thousand years ago, has come down through the ages to us. No matter how great the obstacle, night or storm, beast or bandit, come what might—they held to their objective until the goal was reached.

There is a lesson in perseverance from this story particularly adaptable to present-day conditions. Regardless of the dangers and difficulties which they knew would be encountered, they set out on the long journey across the desert's sands.

As you look back over the year 1931, now fast coming to a close, it may not have been particularly satisfying to you. As for that matter, I doubt if it has been for many of us, but if you have kept your eyes on the Star, through the rebuffs and difficulties you have encountered, the journey has not been without its reward.
