Law Enforcement Day

January 27th has been set aside as "Law Enforcement Day."

We are wondering how things would look on the morning of the 28th if God should enforce the penalties in the same manner as he did to Mrs. Lot for her pride and haughtiness.

If such a scene should be enacted, then think of the murderers, the robbers, the home wreckers, the character destroyers, the bootleggers, the drunkards, the liars, the thieves, the extortioners, the deceivers, the gamblers, the short-weighters, the proud, the haughty, the disobedient—would there not be a great display of wasted opportunities and transgressions of law?

Of course, our day of law enforcement will not turn sinners into salt; yet it is hoped, and the purpose of the day is to induce our people to teach children the serious danger of law violations—which usually begin at home in acts of disobedience.

The first violation of law, even though it be a petty offense, may be the stepping stone to the greatest crime.

Every father, every mother, every teacher should be careful to hold youth in subjection, not permit too much friendly association, which is so often such a great source of sorrow. Keep children home or at school. Keep them busy at some useful task due to the home or due to themselves.

Don't forget to enlist in the law enforcement army for a charge on all fronts on January 27th.

Revaluation and Publicity

News and Observer.

There has developed some opposition to the revaluation of property promised by both party platforms and candidates. There is fear that property would be valued so low in these times of depression that the tax rate would mount very high, or there would not be enough revenue to carry on city and county governments.

The suggestion has been made that instead of the costly method of revaluation that a horizontal reduction be substituted.

The Winston-Salem Journal says: "The State needs equalization of assessments equally as much as it needs revaluation of property," and that paper adds: "Nothing would aid the State in its efforts to equalize tax assessments so much as full publicity of all assessments." It should add: "And full publicity of incomes and the tax on the earnings of foreign stocks." It would greatly increase the income.
