NOT TOO LATE TO PLANT CROPS TO CONSERVE SOILS

All Farmers Have Chance To Meet Requirements And Get Payments

Winter legumes sown in October may be counted as soil-conserving crops under the 1936 soil-improvement program, according to J. F. Criswell, of State College.

The time allowed for seeding conserving crops has been extended to October 31, since many farmers have been handicapped by dry weather, he explained.

He urged growers to take advantage of the time extension and sow enough conserving crops to qualify for the maximum payments possible for them to receive.

A change in the regulations, he added, now permits growers to meet their minimum conserving crop acreage requirements by sowing winter legumes on fields where depleting crops were harvested earlier in the year.

The minimum acreage of conserving crops required is equal to 20 percent of the base cotton, tobacco, and peanut acreage plus 15 percent of the base acreage of other depleting crops.

This is the minimum amount of conserving crops a farmer must grow to participate in the soil-improvement program.

Conserving crops may also be grown for another purpose: to make a grower eligible to receive payment for carrying out soil-building practices. When grown for this purpose, the conserving crop must not

Use Carbon Disulphid To Check Weevils and Worms

To keep worms and weevils out of stored beans and peas, the beans or peas should be treated with carbon disulphid. Fill a water-tight barrel or some other container that can be made air tight to within a few inches of the top with the seed. One-half cupful of carbon disulphid should then be poured directly on the seed and the container covered with a double thickness of heavy wrapping paper, tied tightly around the top. Leave the container for at least two days after which examine the seed and, if any insects are still active repeat the treatment. The container must be kept covered with the paper or insects will reinfest the seed. The treatment will not injure the seed for planting, feed, or food. Each barrel of beans or peas should be given the same treatment.

Mrs. Hubert Boney, of Teachey's Duplin County, was honored with a Master Farm Homemakers Certificate awarded by the Home Demonstration Department of State College and is the first North Carolina woman to be so honored.

be placed on land where depleting crops have been raised this year.

Since the work of checking growers' compliance with provisions of the soil-improvement program has been completed in most counties, Criswell stated, growers who seed conserving crops in October should report it to their county agents so they will get credit for the later seedings.
