Soybeans Desirable Feed for Lambs Say Extension Workers

Quality of Carcass Is Not Affected as in Case of Swine

Although soybeans will produce "soft pork" if fed to fattening hogs, they are a desirable feed for lambs and will not affect the quality of the carcass, reports Dr. John E. Foster, associate professor of the State College Animal Husbandry Department.

With soybean production up nearly 10 times what it was 10 years ago, both farmers and scientists are looking for new and profitable uses for this soil-improving crop.

"We have fed up to three-fourths of a pound of soybeans per day to sheep with good results," Dr. Foster stated. "Soybean oil meal is an excellent protein supplement for sheep, cattle, and even swine. It is the whole beans fed to hogs after they reach 75 to 100 pounds in weight that produces 'soft and oily pork' which is undesirable."

Dr. Foster cited results of experiments conducted by the U. S. Department of Agriculture at the Agricultural Research Center, Beltsville, Md., to support the investigations of the State College Experiment Station.

Three lots of lambs were fed at Beltsville. One group received the usual ration of cracked corn, cottonseed meal, and alfalfa hay. The second lot received only cracked soybeans and alfalfa hay. The third lot received a ration of equal parts of cracked soybeans and cracked corn, with alfalfa hay.

Lambs in each lot averaged more than a third of a pound a day in gain while on feed. Most lamb feeders are satisfied with this daily gain.
