Judy Garland in 'George M. Cohan Musical Comedy

Plays First Solo Starring Role in "Little Nellie Kelly." Here Soon

Introducing Judy Garland in her first solo starring role and in her first "grown up" love affair, "Little Nellie Kelly," coming to the Plymouth Theatre next Monday and Tuesday, is heralded as giving the popular young actress her fullest opportunity dramatically to date. Stepping temporarily out of "kid roles, Miss Garland becomes a grown-up and adds new glory to her acting and singing fame. Teamed with her for histrionic honors are George Murphy and Charles Winninger, with an excellent supporting cast.

The story, based on George M. Cohan's famous play, deals with a young Irish girl who marries against the wishes of her father, who vows that he will never, so long as he lives, speak to her husband. He keeps his word in spite of the fact that he, along with the other two, comes to America to live. In America the daughter dies, leaving behind her an infant named Nellie. As the child grows older she is torn between love for her father and love for the grandfather. In the end the two men are reconciled through her efforts.

Portrays Both Roles
Miss Garland portrays both roles, enacting first the young Irish mother, and later the thoroughly Americanized daughter. The songs she sings include "It's a Great Day for the Irish," "Pretty Girl Milking Her Cow," and the more modern "Singing in the Rain."

Murphy is seen as Miss Garland's husband, and later as her father. Charles Winninger appears as the grandfather. The young baritone, Douglas McPhail, remembered for his work in "Babes in Arms," is the romantic interest of the young Nellie, and Arthur Shields, of the Abbey Players, is McPhail's father. The film was directed by Norman Taurog, director of such human documents as "Boys Town." Arthur Freed produced.

Brenda Marshall Is Starred In Role of Pretty Adventuress

George Brent Takes Male Lead in "South of Suez" Here On Sunday

An exciting film of adventure in a South African diamond mine makes its local debut Sunday when Warner Bros. "South of Suez" plays at the Plymouth Theatre. Murder, theft and jealousy make up the background of this tropical tale.

George Brent is starred in the role of an adventurous mine foreman who can take ruthless greed, unrestrained love and merciless jungle heat in his stride. Brenda Marshall plays the part of a mine owner's daughter who sets out to prove that Brent is innocent of her father's murder. George Tobias, whose screen career has been the most varied in Hollywood, comes starting line-up if he is present at the time.

Both of the coaches have been putting their charges through heavy practice sessions this week as they prepare for the opening game, and a large crowd of spectators is expected to attend.

The next games on the schedule are carded with the Creswell boys and girls, who invade the local gym next Wednesday night.

Miss McLemore and Coach Coates said they expected the teams would make a creditable showing this year, as the lads and lassies are very speedy and they are catching on to the new plays readily.

Fight Scene Will Linger In Memory

A fight scene, filmed during the making of "The Marshal of Mesa City," George O'Brien's new outdoor drama, here Saturday, between O'Brien and Harry Cording, will be remembered on the RKO Radio lot for many days to come.

Both men have years of experience in screen battles but each say the fight in "The Marshal of Mesa City" was one of the toughest they've ever done. Lasting for ten minutes it looked as though it would be anyone's fight but when O'Brien landed a terrific right to Cording's jaw which sent him flying through a closed door, the battle was over.

Fortunately, knowing how to fight for the screen, neither of the men were hurt beyond a few minor bruises, but while it lasted the battle was terrific and one which will be remembered a long time by those who say it filmed.

along with still another 'different' characterization. This time he is cast as a blood-thirsty, greed-ridden mine owner who is sure that Brent stands between his happiness with his wife.
