

Raise 19.2 Bushels Wheat Per Acre on Long Acre Farm

Report Is Made on Small Grain and Soda Demonstration Near Here

A yield of 19.2 bushels of wheat per acre from a three-acre tract was reported this week by Tim H. Bowen, farmer of the Long Acre section, according to W. S. Moore, vocational agriculture teacher in the Plymouth High School.

Mr. Moore said Mr. Bowen was favorably impressed with the yield from the small grain and soda demonstration, although he believed the crop would have been larger if the seed had been planted earlier and more rain had been available.

"This is one of the few wheat crops harvested in Washington County," Mr. Moore said, emphasizing that this "should tend to show that our soils will raise the grains, and that the crop system of Washington County should include enough small grains to furnish the family and at least part of the livestock needs."

Mr. Bowen is of the opinion that 200 pounds of soda applied in two applications of 100 pounds each will be most profitable. Oats and soybeans were planted on the land last year. The soda was applied on March 3 and 17 and no other fertilizer was used. The tests returned the following results: 100 pounds of soda produced 16.7 bushels of wheat per acre; 200 pounds of soda, 18 bushels per acre; 300 pounds of soda, 21.4 bushels per acre; and where no soda was applied, the yield was 12 bushels per acre.

Mr. Moore said that the yield of wheat on heavier soils, such as those in the blackland area, would have been larger, but that the yield was a good average for peanut land.

Ask Poultrymen To Buy Better Chicks For Increased Eggs

Maupin Says Buy Only Certified Chicks Sired by Pedigreed Cockerels

Here's a tip from C. J. Maupin, extension poultryman of N. C. State College, to the poultry grower interested in increasing his egg production: Buy only certified chicks sired by pedigreed cockerels.

The grower following this advice would boost his average flock production by 25 or more eggs per hen annually. Then, too, the general use of such chicks in maintaining the laying flock, together with good feeding, care, and management, would provide several million additional eggs a year for national defense needs.

To qualify for the U. S. Record of Performance Rating under the National Poultry Improvement Plan, cockerels must be from hens laying more than 200 eggs a year. The NPIP is a cooperative effort to improve poultry flocks.

Because the sire and dam are equally responsible for the level of production in the offspring, Maupin predicts ROP cockerels, or males of equally good pedigree, used in the average poultry flock, would raise the State's average annual production of 85 eggs per hen to 110 or more.

This increase, the specialist said, is midway between average farm flock production and the production of pullet flocks from which hens are selected to produce ROP cockerels.

One way to make certain that chicks purchased are sired by N. C. R.O.P. males is to get them from Certified or Verified hatcheries. County agents have available lists containing the names of those approved hatcheries, or the information may be obtained from the poultry department of the College.

Ruritan Speaker Here Last Week

There are 107 clubs of Ruritan National in Virginia. North Carolina, South Carolina and Maryland at the present time, according to Principal B. L. White, of the Sunbury school in Gates County, who spoke to the Lions Club here last Thursday night.

The Ruritan Clubs were started for smaller communities back in 1928 and by 1930 Ruritan National had been chartered by the State of Virginia, and then it began the enormous growth it has recorded in the last 11 years, according to Mr. White.

One of the requirements of the organization is that one-third of the membership must be farmers, while the other two-thirds may be composed of business or professional men. Ruritans operate in much the same manner as Kiwanis, Rotary and Lions clubs, with the exception that while the other service clubs usually meet weekly, the charter for the Ruritans requires that at least one dinner meeting of the club be held monthly.
