Eats His Way Into United States Navy

Paul Fritz, 22 years old, actually ate his way into the Navy recently. When told by the recruiting officer that he was six pounds under the required 156 pounds for his height, Fritz was downcast, but no more so than the recruiting officer because 6-foot 2-inch had passed all other requirements with flying colors.

Fritz pondered his plight for a few minutes, beamed with an idea and vanished. The recruiting officer was astonished an hour later when Fritz returned hopefully and said, "Try me now."

He tipped the scales at exactly 156 pounds. How did he do it? By eating six bananas, a pound of beef steak, six slices of bread, several large potatoes, a couple of desserts and a gallon of water!

As he departed for the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, Fritz remarked, "I don't believe I'll be able to eat a thing—before supper."
