Many Farm Families Will Take on Job Of Caring for 10 Per Cent More Hogs

"Labor shortage and other problems may make it impossible for some people to raise more hogs, even though they'd like too," says W. Willis Bowen, Farm Security Administration County Supervisor for Washington County. "On the other hand, you can bet your bottom dollar that many farmers will take on the job . . . they'll join the ranks of those raising 10 per cent more pigs just as they and millions of others have joined the 10 per cent clubs in buying war bonds

"Farm Security borrowers and other operators of family-type farms," Mr. Bowen adds, "are usually in a good position to up their hog production 10 per cent. Outside labor is not a factor with them, as the family does practically all the farm work. Moreover, most of them raised more hogs this year than ever before, and could increase their 1943 production by 10 per cent or more without having to add to their equipment. Then too, they mostly have more feed on hand this year than for a good many years running."

Mr. Bowen says that Farm Security has been authorized to make loans to small farmers needing special credit to enable them to get into fuller production of livestock and other wartime food necessities. He can be reached in the FSA office in the Leggett Building in Plymouth, N. C. by farmers wishing to talk over their production problems.
