Enumerators Not To Reveal Data

Residents of this area today were given assurance by F. Webb Williams, census district supervisor, that any information obtained from them by census takers will be held in strictest confidence.

Mr. Williams said that the law which authorizes taking the 17th States expressly forbids census takers and other employees from communicating to any person not sworn census employee any in-formation obtained in the dis-charge of their official duties.

Severe penalties are provided for violation of the census law on the part of employees of the cen-sus taker liable, upon conviction, to a fine of as much as $1,000 and imprisonment for 2 years. More-over, prosecution for such of-fense may be instituted even if disclosure of information is made after employment with the Bu-reau of the Census is ended.

Mr. Williams said that the cen-sus law even forbids a census enumerator to answer if he is asked what the population is of his district or any smaller area. Such requests, whether from newspapers, local officials, or in-dividuals, must be referred to the office of the census district su-pervisor. This office will make a preliminary announcement of the population soon after the dis-trict's enumeration has been com-pleted.

Census enumerators are direct-ed not to omit any dwelling house, structure, farm or resident in their districts, and not to enu-merate willfully as a resident of his district any person not entit-led to be counted in the enumera-tion district. Enumerators also are forbidden to enter upon the questionnaire statement concern-ing any person or farm enumerat-ed. Conviction upon such charge would lay the enumerator liable to a fine of as much as $2,000 and 5 years' imprisonment.

Under provisions of the census act, enumerators are not allowed to combine their work with any other occupation, such as collect-ing information for directory pub-lisher, soliciting subscriptions to newspapers or magazines, or selling or advertising any article whatsoever. The census takers are not allowed to engage in any activity or discussions with res-pondents that is not directly re-lated to the work of obtaining required information. They may not, for example, leave any cards or other literature which does not relate to the taking of the census.

"In view of all these restric-tions, plus the fact that every em-ployee of the Census Bureau is sworn to secrecy, no one need fear that information given to the census taker in April will be re-vealed or otherwise misused," Mr. Williams declared.
