DEATH OF DORA LOWE

Dora Lowe was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Sanders and she was the wife of Walter Lowe. She was sick with the "Flue" for about two weeks and died on the 28th day of February, 1920.

She was a most devoted Christian from early girlhood and ever since her little boy died, 3 years ago, she had been so true to Jesus that she very often said that she was living for the coming day when she would meet her little one and other loved ones gone on before. She was very patient from the very first and on Thursday night complained about a feeling of smothering and she prayed to her Lord a very sweet prayer.

Dora was very weak and could not drink water or take her medicine.

She is mourned by her father and mother, brothers and sisters, husband and a baby.

We all feel consolation in the fact that she was ready for glory and if we can do the same, we'll all meet again around the throne of glory.

UNIVERSITY OF NORTH CAROLINA NEWS SERVICE

Chapel Hill, N. C., May 12—"Human evolution viewed in retrospect and prospect justifies the most glorious hopes for mankind", were the concluding words of the series of three lectures at the University of North Carolina delivered by Dr. E. G. Conklin, Professor of biology at Princeton, under the John Calvin Mc Nair foundation.

Dr. Conklin, who is one of the best known scholars in America on the subject of evolution and heredity, said that physically and intellectually there has been no developments in man for such a long time that probably man has reached his highest point of development in these respects. "There is no prospect that the hand, the eye, or the brain of man will ever be much more complex or perfect than at present," he said "By selective breeding the general level may be improved, just as it has been in domestic animals, but there are no indications that future man will be much more perfect in body or mind that the most perfect individuals of to-day."

"It is not probable that there will be a higher animal than man," Dr. Conklin continued. "All races are now intermingling and interbreeding and all signs point to the formation of a single composite race with in a few thousand years. It is not likely therefore that a superior human species will arise to supplant the existing species."

In the evolution of human society, however, Dr. Conklin saw infinite possibilities. "In social evolution a new path of progress has been found the end of which no one can foresee. Society has progressed from savagery to barbarism and then to civilization, and the end is not yet. At present social evolution is proceeding at a rate which is amazing if not alarming. The greatest problems in human evolution to-day are social problems, how to get effective specialization and co-operation, not merely in government, but in industry, in education, and in the scientific conquest of nature."

In discussing evolution and democracy Dr. Conklin said that the ideal democracy toward which the world is headed meant more co-operation than any other form of government. "It means," he said, "not greater personal freedom, but greater freedom of states and nations and humanity."

Dr. Conklin saw no conflict between evolution and religion because evolution neither affirms nor denies the existence of God. It merely traces effects to causes and these to pre-existing causes, and never reaches the first cause. Infinity lies back of every phenomenon, even the most simple. The religion of evolution looks forward to unnumbered ages of human progress, to ages of better social organization and co-operation among individuals and races and nations, to ages of justice and peace and altruism."
