GAME WAR HERO LOSES HIS NERVE

Exposed to Police by His Wife, Crippled Veteran Tries to End His Life.

IS CAUGHT IN HOLDUP

Escapes From Prison, Goes to Chicago to Meet His Wife and Finds Detectives at Rendezvous Instead.

Chicago.—Overseas they called him "the gamest man of a hard-boiled regiment." In the midst of the terrific artillery bombardments at Toul and San Mihel he drove his team and plied his shovel and never faltered under fire until he dropped.

Roy Little, top sergeant of company B of the forty-fifth engineers, came home from the war to Chicago with his left arm and side paralyzed from shell shock. He was able to work but little. His government pension didn't come.

He was cheerful withal. He could battle with life and win against all the hard knocks, he said.

Then he fell in love. After a while they were married and took up their home near Twenty-eighth street and Cottage Grove avenue. A few months—and discord.

Little was broke. His pension still hadn't arrived. He was crippled, and no one wanted a crippled employe. He was discouraged and desperate. This was in September, 1919.

Meets Tempters, Falls.

About that time he met two men who gave the names of Phillip Hurt and James Walsh. They told how easy money could be gotten; they professed great friendship for him. They proposed, finally, a trip to Milwaukee. Little went.

The trio held up a jewelry store, were caught, and sentenced to seven years each in Waupun prison.

Little, crippled, was sent by the Wisconsin authorities to the prison hospital at Mendota. He became a trusty and escaped. He went first to Duluth, thence to St. Paul, Kansas

Lay in a Widening Pool of Blood.

City, St. Louis. He came back to Chicago on Friday.

Wife Traps Him.

He telephoned his wife that he was here. "I'm going straight," he told her. "If I hadn't been blue and desperate, I wouldn't have gone crooked before. But now I'm through. Will you meet me?"

She did—Friday afternoon. Little's pension of $90 a month had been granted finally and was coming to her regularly. Friday night she said she'd meet him again, at Cottage Grove avenue and Twenty-eighth street.

Instead of Mrs. Little, Detective Sergeants William O'Connor, Charles Egan, and Thomas Burke accosted him. Little fought them with his one good arm until they locked him in cell No. 1 at the detective bureau. "Who betrayed me?" he asked. "Was it my wife?"

That evening he was found in his cell with his withered arm hanging limply on the floor in a widening pool of blood. He had torn the handle from a tin cup and severed the arteries in one wrist. He then lay down to bleed to death.

His Name Was "Booze."

Excelsior Springs, Mo.—Suspicion rested on a stranger in Liberty a few days ago when he stepped into a restaurant and asked permission to leave his grip a short time. Officers of the law in the restaurant suspected the man and the grip immediately and decided to keep a watch for results. On lifting the bag it was found to be heavy. After sniffing it, one sleuth declared it contained beer beyond a doubt, while the other held out strongly for wine. When the owner returned he was immediately put under arrest. "What have you in that grip," asked the officer, and tremblingly the man returned "Only Booze." Whereupon he opened his baggage willingly and out hopped a little puppy who answered to the name.
