MR. BOWSER IS RUINED

And He Lays It All to Mrs. Bowser, of Course.

By M. QUAD.

(© 1921, by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"I am a ruined man!" Mr. Bowser threw away his newspaper and cigar as he uttered the words. They were spoken as solemnly as a young man speaks when he asks a girl to be his wife, and she tells him to go to Texas.

Mrs. Bowser looked up, and turned a shade paler. "Yes, I am a ruined man, and you are the cause of it!"

"Do you mean that you have gone into bankruptcy?"

"No, not exactly, but, nevertheless, you have ruined me financially."

"Can't you pay two cents on the dollar?"

"It isn't that, but you have ruined me by ruining my prospects. What am I today? I am working my brains out, and receiving only a small income. All the best years of my life have passed away, and I have not taken advantage of the many golden opportunities held out to me. I have been thinking things all over, and I tell you, Mrs. Bowser, I feel very bitter! If I have to go into bankruptcy, it will be your fault. If we become paupers no one but you will be to blame!"

"I don't know that I have done anything to prevent you from getting on," she said in a very calm voice.

"Oh, you don't, eh! Well, we will go over the case. Some years ago I wanted to become an apple-grower. I got all the facts and figures and brought them to you. Apples were then on the rise, and have been ever since. I saw a chance to become a millionaire. I wanted to get a thousand acres of land and set out 10,000 apple trees. Each tree would have yielded me ten bushels of fruit, and I would thus have had 10,000,000 bushels to sell. I was all ready to go into it—when—when—"

"When I figured it out," interrupted Mrs. Bowser. "I figured that you didn't have the money to buy the land with. You hadn't the tenth of the cash to buy the trees with. You couldn't have paid the men for setting them out. It was simply a wild dream of yours."

"Never mind the wild dream!" said Mr. Bowser, with a wave of his hand. "What you term a bad dream may turn out a golden dream. I wanted to go into peach brandy. It had just been discovered, and was taken up everywhere. Whisky, gin, rum, beer and all other drinks were giving way to peach brandy. Even the President of the United States kept his bottle. My aim was to get a corner on the peach crop of the United States for five years. There would be millions of bushels. There would be millions of barrels of peach brandy. I would put the price up, and hold it there. The papers would have given me the name of 'Peach-Brandy Bowser,' and you would have come in to share my fame, but no—no! You must get out pencil and paper and do some figuring! By that figuring you cost me millions!"

"Yes, I remember," answered Mrs. Bowser. "You had about $5,000 at the time. You had need of about $5,000,000. I simply asked you where you were going to get the money from, and you got mad and went out for a walk."

"Never mind the madness nor the money, Mrs. Bowser! I am sure I could have pushed through in some way, and been reeling in my gold at this moment. Other men have raised $5,000,000, and why shouldn't I? And there was the potato case: Potatoes were high and going higher. It needed no figure to show that they would come to $1 a bushel. Potatoes could be raised at 50 cents a bushel and, by selling at $3 a bushel, why, a man could have arranged to raise 3,000,000 bushels a year, and that would have given me a clean profit of over $7,000,000. Didn't you stop me from going into this scheme?"

"Why," answered Mrs. Bowser, "I figured that you couldn't raise 30 bushels a year. You had no land, you see. You had no capital to use. As a matter of fact, potatoes are cheaper now than they were then. Men have thought that they could make diamonds out of pebbles, but they have never succeeded yet."

"Never mind the men and the pebbles," continued Mr. Bowser. "You have ruined me, and, of course, you are trying to find excuses, but I shall hold you guilty! I could have made three or four million dollars in bacon, but you must get out pencil and paper and show me that I couldn't. Hogs were then very cheap. You could buy a fat hog for about a dollar. You could cut him up and smoke the meat and make it bring you about $12. Why, it was as easy as turning your hand over, but, no—no—no again! You said I would lose everything I put into it, and tonight you are facing the fact that bacon is 50 cents a pound, and your husband could have been worth $20,000,000 as well as not!"

"Mr. Bowser, what you always lacked was capital. You had no money to buy hogs nor to handle the meat, and you were going into the scheme without any experience. I advised you not to do it, and again you got mad and left the house. I think I saved your bacon, if you didn't go into bacon."

"Never mind my bacon, Mrs. Bowser! But for you I would be able to buy out half this town now, and it must be a great satisfaction to you to know it. We will take another case. When I saw that war was coming, which was before anyone else, I knew there would be a great demand for cucumber pickles to send to the soldiers. I wanted to get 5,000 acres of land and plant it all in cucumbers. I would thus raise enough to sell to the government at least ten carloads of cucumbers. The government would buy and pickle them. They would have paid me millions of dollars. I had everything worked out, even to the last cucumber, but I met your opposition again. You began figuring on the cost of the seeds, the land, the cultivation, the gathering and selling, and you made out that I would lose about $10,000. What was the result, guilty woman! Why, cucumber pickles sold for a quarter apiece, and the government couldn't get enough of them at that price. Every soldier wanted his pickle, morning, noon and night, and some of them positively refused to fight without a pickle in their pockets. Ah, but how can you sit there so calm and cool, when you have worked such black ruin!"

"You can thank me that you are not in the poorhouse," quietly observed Mrs. Bowser.

"Never mind the poorhouse, but listen to me! There is just one chance of my recouping myself—just one chance. If you prevent me from taking this chance, nothing will be left to me but suicide. Mrs. Bowser, do you know that horseradish is selling at 25 cents a bottle, when it used to sell at five? All the doctors in the country are recommending it. It is found the greatest cure for many ailments. I want to make horseradish troches. I want to make them by the billion. I want to flood the whole world with them. The profit is 200 per cent. Now, then, are you going to oppose me?"

Mrs. Bowser could contain herself no longer. Her laugh was almost hysterical. Mr. Bowser looked at her and gave up all hopes. He heard her laughter and knew he was ruined forever. He left the house to suicide, but, up to date, his body has not been found dangling from the limb of a soft maple shade tree.

Oils From Petroleum.

Benzoline, kerosene or coal oil, and petrol or gasoline, are obtained from petroleum by a process similar in principle to that employed to obtain alcohol from the fermented grain mash. The crude petroleum is brought to a certain temperature, which causes its lighter and more volatile parts to be driven off in the form of vapor, which, being collected and allowed to condense, becomes those lighter oils of which gasoline is one, and which made possible the engine that drives airplanes, automobiles, tractors and threshing machines.

Famous Violin Maker.

Joseph Guarneri was a member of a family of celebrated violin makers in Cremona, Italy. He was active in his work from 1680 to 1730. His violins are usually partly identified by a stain or sapmark in the belly running parallel with the finger board on either side. They were noted for their tone-producing powers, a fact which has stimulated the sale of spurious violins with his forged inscription.

Honesty.

"The baker's boy was very fresh. If a cake was ten cents he'd say $10. The baker had to stop him." "Why?" "Some people started to pay it." Louisville Courier-Journal.
